The Beginning of Big Road Building Project to Connect Kendrick and Juliaetta with Lewiston

Crushed rock is being put on the road northeast of Kendrick between the Bear Creek bridge and Wand-cher gulch bridge. Campbell & Barr have the contract on this strip of road and the first coat of rock is already being spread. With good weather conditions the contractors expect to finish this piece of road before the first of the year. This has long been one of the worst stretches of road in the country and those who travel it extensively will be delighted to know that it will soon be in first class shape.

The building of this stretch of road is the first step in the big road building program mapped out at the booster meeting held at Lewiston Thursday of last week.

Soon after the first of the year if weather is favorable it is planned to begin work on the 2 1/2 mile stretch below town. This will be graded and surfaced and will probably be finished by an early date in the spring.

The following article taken from the Lewiston Tribune gives a very good account of what transpired at the meeting at Lewiston last week:

Of most friendly cooperative nature was the meeting in Lewiston last evening, at a dinner in the Lewis-Clark hotel, of representative citizens of Latah and Nez Perce counties, to consider the completion of a highway link between Arrow Junction and the county line, connecting with that through Juliaetta and Kendrick into the Potlatch country. The result was the unanimous adoption of a motion pledging the two counties, as represented at the meeting, to the early completion of the road, as the most important piece of highway construction yet unprovided for in this vicinity.

Present at the meeting were members of the Latah county board of commissioners, members of the Clearwater highway district board, members of the Kendrick highway district board, members of the Lewiston highway district board and citizens of Kendrick, Juliaetta and other communities interested, those present including the following: E. P. Atkinson, Wade T. Keene, V. Thomas, F. Beneske, H. L. Barr, A. Willmot, Theo. Hanson, N. E. Walker, G. F. Walker, George T. Davidson, Claus Elchher of Kendrick; Charles Hill, C. F. Byrne, E. W. Porter, William Cox, Columbus Clark, J. C. Hamill, Juliaetta; R. B. Parks, A. A. May, Leland; W. H. Stump, Southwick; John Cone, Princeton; J. W. Thomas, Clarkston; Elmer M. Paulson, Moscow; A. A. Seaborg, C. F. Parker, D. Schiffer, M. A. Means, P. J. Miller, A. T. Schick, F. C. Holbrook, J. H. Campbell, G. L. Sticker, M. B. Mikkelsen, W. G. Hawkinson, B. F. Savage, E. A. Cox, P. R. Bevis, Lloyd Harris, Dr. J. T. Moser, E. A. White, Frank Thompson and H. H. S. Rowell.

Senator E. W. Porter of Juliaetta was designated by President Bevis of the Lewiston Commercial club as the dean of the visiting delegates and put in charge of the speaking program. Mr. Porter explained that the formerly poor road to the Potlatch ridge had been much improved but that a few miles below Arrow Junction and the county line is in poor condition and that the meeting had been called to remedy this lack of practical outlet.

Columbus Clark of Juliaetta chairman of the board of county commissioners of Latah county, said that he had lived in the county when both Latah and Nez Perce counties were in one county. In part, he further said:

"This community is separated from the northeast part of Nez Perce county and from Latah county, because there are no roads to reach them. We are ready and willing to start when you are and build a road from Potlatch creek to Arrow Junction. You need us, and we need you. The road would give a natural water grade and is the only way to get to Lewiston. We are ready to meet you at the county line. This road will connect the Lewis and Clark highway and the North and South highway."

William Cox, chairman of the Kendrick highway district, said that the Kendrick highway district had made arrangements to surface one mile of road north of Kendrick and two and one half miles of road between Kendrick and Juliaetta.

John Coné of Princeton said that they were in favor of meeting the people here as speedily as possible.

R. E. Parks, of Leland, declared that his community would be glad to have a road up to Potlatch; that the Potlatch highway district had contracted to put in four miles of road up Pine creek and open up the way to Lewiston.

Ed Atkinson of Kendrick said that he had been well filled, felt well, was glad to be here and thought that now was the time to do something.

Filmer Paulson of Moscow, one of the county commissioners of Latah county, expressed the opinion that this piece of work could be handled easily and in good time.

Ed Willmot of Kendrick also spoke briefly in favor of the proposition.

Mark Means of Lewiston, senator-elect, said that he remembered when he was at Juliaetta 41 years ago, and came to Lewiston, where he afterwards located, traveling on a winding trail down to this place, saying further:

"I feel that there is nothing so necessary as the building of good roads to develop the country as it should be, and road construction should continue and each little road connection made if possible."

E. A. Cox said that the people here were more glad to welcome the guests than even in the case of ordinary neighbors, because the present ones could seldom be seen. Further he said in part:

"There is no need of discussing the need of this road. There is no piece of road which can be constructed for the same cost that is of equal value with this, in my opinion. The people of Lewiston, owing to their peculiar isolation, were compelled to build roads. The city was isolated from the country and we are compelled to mould the policies in road building of both north Idaho and Washington. An agreement was at length reached to build a road up the Lewiston hill, if Washington would build a highway into southeastern Washington to reach Lewiston. The project was one of great interest to both the people of Washington and Idaho. The building of the Lewiston highway put over the highway program in Washington.

"At the same time, we built four and one-half miles on the north and south highway toward Moscow and five miles of road toward Hatwal-

The Christmas Holly Girl

About this nucleus the Lewis and Clark highway was initiated. The road in which you are interested has been put on our program. It is a necessity and must be built. You have the pledge of this club that the road will be completed."

E. A. White one of the commissioners of the Lewiston highway district, said that Mr. Cox had stated the highway situation very clearly, and further said in part:

"At first we could see only the hill. After raising the sum of $150,000 we tied the state for one-third of the cost, and having some to spare we built beyond the city limits to the Washington line. We joined with the state in building the road to Moscow. We also built a piece of road to Hatwal creek, we paved the bridge across the river, we fixed the road toward Spalding, we joined in building the 'orphan' link from the Clearwater district line to the Nez Perce county line and we gave up claims on county and state funds to aid the state in further work on the north and south highway."

Astor A. Seaborg of Lewiston said: "I back up Cox in a pledge to build the road."

Secretary Savage explained that, for good reasons, the members of the Nez Perce county board were unable to be present, but that he had their assurance that they were thoroughly in sympathy with the construction of the proposed road.

In conclusion, a motion was unanimously adopted that the people of the two counties, through their representatives at this meeting, mutually pledge themselves to complete the road.

MANUAL TRAINING BOYS MAKE BOWS

Finished Work on Display at Farmers Hardware

The work that has been accomplished in the Manual Training department within the last month is work that is a credit to any student or school.

The art of constructing the bow and arrow, altho an old art is one that few people are able to perform as it is rather difficult and calls for very accurate work. Under the supervision of Mr. Strauch, the manual training teacher, eight or ten of these sets have been completed.

Some of the boys made the six foot English army bow while others made the standard boy's bow which is five and a half feet in length.

The wood which was used by the boys was obtained from Cedar Creek by Mr. Strauch, this making the cost of production very small. The material used cost each boy about a dollar. The sale price of a bow alone is $38 if purchased from the Spalding Sporting Goods firm. This readily shows us the value of being able to construct a well made bow.

The first step in its construction is that of quartering the Yew wood. The bark is then removed and the corners are trimmed. After this much has been accomplished it is blocked into its desired shape by the use of a plane; this being done it is marked off into sections. These are then gaged accurately with calipers and the piece of Yew wood further changes its appearance by the placing of the tips on each end. These are made from either cow, deer or buffalo horns, altho wood can be used but the polished horn tips are preferred. A rawhide bark is glued on, this step requires a great deal of skill in order to produce a neat and even finish. The bow is now ready for its first finishing touches. A wood file is used and the surface is scraped and sand papered. The grip is laced on and is then wrapped. The tips are also wrapped and the bow is ready for a coat of varnish. When this is dry the entire bow is given a general polishing with linseed oil and pummi stone. The string for the bow is made with sack eight sack twine and a loop is placed at one end. A loop is also made at the other end and wound with wire. The bow can be easily strung. Now it presents the appearance of a finished bow. Through this entire process it is placed in a clamp at various times in order that it will have the proper shape.

A couple of arrows complete the set. The arrow is first cut roughly out of wood, the approximate length being twenty eight inches. The corners are removed and the surface is sand papered and it is then ready to be tipped. Various kinds are used, the parallel tip and the spear head being most common. Three parallel grooves are made in the other end and a feather is glued in each groove. A notch is carefully cut in this end to receive the string of the bow. The arrow is then varnished or painted in any way desired. Each step in this construction depends on the true cutting of the material as this is absolutely necessary in the making of an accurate shooting arrow.

Press dispatches say the soviet government of Russia expects to recruit 5000 steel workers from the Youngstown, Ohio, district this month. An agent is searching for padders, machinists, rollers and mill hands already. Surely he will not have any difficulty in finding this small number of dissatisfied workers who will welcome an opportunity to go to a country where capitalism has been abolished and the workers reign supreme.

Sam Gompers and his lesser lieutenants should easily recruit 5000 down-trodden American workmen who would go with them to Russia where they could all spend the rest of their days in peace and under conditions which they have been striving for years to establish here.

The Troy Lumber & Manufacturing Co this week started on their grind to put out 800,000 feet of lumber, which contract was secured by the manager, A. R. Bohman, on a recent visit to Spokane. This will keep the wheels of the factory in motion for some time. The contract will mean a shipment of about twenty-five car-loads of lumber.

The Albright brothers, who reside a few miles below town on the Potlatch creek, relate a peculiar accident which occurred a few days ago and resulted in the death of their fine Airdale dog. They have killed five coyotes already this season and were out hunting them, when the dog was chasing one of the animals and was crowding it closely, being only about ten feet behind the coyote, when it came within easy range of Marvin Albright, who fired at it with a high powered rifle, using a soft nosed bullet. The missile struck something that split the bullet, one portion striking the coyote in the hip and the other hitting the Airdale dog in the head, causing a wound from which it died in a few minutes.

are being constructed in the manual training room, including a gun case, library table, buffet, etc. The boys are not only learning to build but they are also learning the use and care of their tools, how to sharpen a saw, and how to make an accurate and useful drawing of the project that they are going to make. The course in general is striving to teach them the very fundamentals of construction as well as the art of construction itself.

For the benefit of those interested in the work the boys are doing, some of the completed work is now on display in the window at the Farmers Hardware. —B. M. L.

SMOKEHOUSE IS FARM ESSENTIAL

Late War Responsible for Revival of Old Custom of Farmers Curing Meat Supply.

CONCRETE IS MOST DURABLE

Good Type for General Purposes Is Shown in Illustration—Has Been in Use Three Seasons and More Than Paid for Itself.

The old-time custom of home curing meats, revived during the war has been given added impetus in the last few years and many farmers are actively engaged in preparing their surplus supply for table and sale.

There is no reason why every farm should not have a modern smokehouse and the resulting supply of well-cured meats on hand through the winter season. Prices for old country hams make it worth any farmer's time to lay in as big a supply as possible.

Solid Concrete Is Best. Many types of smokehouses are in use, ranging from the old type of a barrel with one head knocked out to the most modern and pretentious affairs of solid concrete with double padlocked doors. The latter type is growing steadily in popular favor because of its many natural advantages. A concrete smokehouse affords permanency, protection, better quality products and has a big economic advantage through the fact that it is fireproof and requires no upkeep expense from one season to the next.

A good type for general purposes is shown in the accompanying illustration. The smokehouse has been in operation for three seasons and has more than paid for itself already with many more years of usage ahead.

It is built of concrete blocks with a wooden peak roof. Many other farmers, however, are building the roofs of concrete as well because of the danger of burning the wooden roofing and the effects of severe weather on the boards.

A foundation is laid by excavating to a depth of two or three feet and setting a footing, 18 inches wide and 8 or 10 inches thick. Upon this the wall rests, starting with concrete bricks laid upon a firm mixture of cement mortar. It must be remembered that only as much mortar as will be used in an hour's time should be mixed at one time as it will "set" in less than that time.

Racks and hooks are provided for hanging the meat in the upper part of the structure so that the smoke will have free circulation during the curing process.

Experts in meat smoking hold that fresh green hickory chips are the best fuel for flavor and the market value of meat thus prepared will exceed that where ordinary methods are employed.

An added feature of this smokehouse is the fact that it is absolutely safe from the depredations of mice and rats and can be locked to keep out two-legged visitors.

GIVE HARNESS PROPER CARE

Mixture of Neat's-Foot and Castor Oil Is Recommended With Application of Grease.

Neat's-foot or castor oil or a mixture of these with wool grease is good for driving harness. For heavy harness use a mixture of any or all of these with wool grease to make a paste, having about the consistency of butter. Apply the grease lightly to driving harness and liberally to work harness. Rub the oil or grease, warm to the hand, thoroughly into the leather while it is still damp from washing. After the harness has hung in a warm room overnight, remove with a clean dry cloth the excess of oil which the leather is unable to take up.

Great Savers.

How our mothers and grandmothers would have appreciated the wonderfully efficient electrical appliances of the present day. Probably most of all the electric washer and ironer, because, if the proper machines are selected, they represent the greatest economy. Not only do they save money, time and backbreaking drudgery, but they save the clothes themselves.

A Pair of Stockings

By Christopher G. Hazard

(© 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

BUDDY SMITH had three ideas about his stockings—they were full of feet, full of holes, and they could be full of presents. It was with regard to the third idea that he was paying attention to the second. Willing to go barefoot under the circumstances, he was tying up the holes in his best stocking, with a view to the Christmas possibilities. His sister, Agnes, had already hung up a much longer stocking, with a note attached in which she informed all who might be concerned that this one was hers. But Agnes, like the monkey that used a rabbit for a muff and kept himself warm by hugging it, was a little selfish. Not only had she hung up one of her mother's stockings, but she had got an advantage over Buddy in the matter of the chocolate cake in the cupboard, for there were holes all round it the size of her little finger.

So it was that on Christmas morning the shorter stocking had the most in it.

PROPER CARE OF MACHINERY

Various Implements Should Be Kept in Repair and Breakage Reduced to Minimum.

Nowadays when a machine breaks it is not only the cost of replacement to be considered, but the machine may be out of service for several days or weeks because the dealer's stock of parts is low and completely out on some items.

And it isn't the dealer's fault, either, in most cases. He has orders in for short stock parts, but ordering is one thing and getting orders filled is something else, as all machinery dealers and their customers know to their sorrow.

All farm machinery should be kept painted. Reduce breakage to the minimum. Parts will break often enough when machines are handled with the utmost care, but just now, when replacements are so expensive and so difficult to get promptly regardless of price, the least the farmer can do is to guard against this unnecessary weakening of essential equipment, by allowing rust to set in on it.

PASTURES OF TILLABLE LAND

Erroneous Impression That Rough, Thin Soil Is Good for Grass to Feed Animals.

More pasture and better pasture is the paramount need on many farms where there are animals. There has been an erroneous impression that farmers must have rough, very thin or otherwise cheap land for pasture. The facts are some of the most expensive and most fertile land on some farms would pay better in pasture than in the ordinary field crops now being grown on it, simply because producing feed and harvesting and feeding is too expensive. Why not let the animals do their own harvesting and feed themselves, using crops that need no cultivation? It will pay on some farms.

That many farm boys who enroll as club members in the production of live stock and crops become successful farmers is demonstrated in the case of eight young men living in Itaska county, Minnesota, who carried on club demonstrations from three to four years. According to a report to the United States Department of Agriculture four of them are now engaged in general farming, three of whom are growing certified potato seed, one is a dairy farmer, two are students at Minnesota College of Agriculture, and one is studying for the ministry.

THE MAIL CARRIER

Christmas presents in his day, too. This year one of the families he had served so regularly prepared a Christmas box for him and for his wife and for his children.

"It is the first Christmas box I ever received from one of my families," he said. "Wasn't it thoughtful of them to have remembered their mail carrier?"

But the people were saying, "To think that we haven't done something of this sort every year. The mail carrier does so much for us and we, at times, almost seem to forget he's even human!"

who write to me, and when Christmas comes they knit ties for me or buy a handsome silk handkerchief or two, or a fine muffler—a little thought of me at any rate. And I've never been in a divorce case yet," he ended.

"You must be a diplomat or luckier than you deserve," someone remarked.

"Neither," he answered. "I'm a milkman and a milkman's Christmas is apt to be full of cheer and the good-hearted wishes of the ladies!"

Prepare Seed Exhibits

Latah County is to be represented at the 1923 Idaho State Seed Show, which will be held in Burley January 9 to 12.

County Agent O. S. Fletcher is assembling a representative exhibit of seeds grown in Latah County and will ship this from Moscow on Dec. 26th. All farmers who have any good seed are urged to prepare an exhibit and send it to the county agent at Moscow. Freight on the exhibit from Moscow to Burley will be paid by the Seed Show. Anyone desiring special information is asked to communicate with Mr. Fletcher, who will furnish a premium list and help in any way that he can.

Following are a few of the classes that will be of interest to Latah County farmers: Certified Jenkins Club seed wheat, field peas, garden peas, soft white wheat, white club wheat, soft red winter wheat, oats, hulled barley, hull-less barley.

One peck of any of the above seeds is required for an exhibit, and, outside of the certified class, any variety may be shown in the lot mentioned.

Ten ears Yellow Dent corn, ten ears White Dent corn, ten ears any other Dent corn, ten ears pop, flint, or sweet corn, any variety.

Latah County has been represented at the last three State Seed Shows and exhibits from this county have won more than their proportionate share of the prizes. County Agent Fletcher says: "We grow good seeds, let us exhibit them. It is good advertising to win a prize at the Idaho State Seed Show."

In many cases weeds are spread about the farms due to the failure of farmers to grind screenings that are to be fed to chicks. Screenings for chicks are valuable as feed, but they often contain many seeds of noxious weeds. Unless the seed is cracked up so that the germination power is spoiled trouble results. In one case they found that wild oats, common mustard, rugweed, corn cockle, European vetch and cowherb resulted from the use of whole screenings. Not only need the screenings be ground, but they ought to be watched, as often they contain poisonous weeds such as corn-cockle seeds.

FAR UP NORTH

CANADIAN Mounted Police bring this story back to civilization from the Far North:
 J. L. McCleery, a woodsman, 53 years old, got caught in a terrific blizzard on an island in the Mackenzie River. His feet frozen and only a sack of flour between himself and starvation, McCleery refused to be discouraged. Lying helpless in a bunk along the wall of a log cabin, he managed to dig out the dried mud between the logs, securing access to the drifted snow outside. He mixed the snow with the flour, making a paste on which he lived for 18 weeks. All this time, he was unable to light a fire. His fur sleeping bag kept him from freezing to death. His feet, frozen before he dragged himself to shelter, drove him nearly crazy with pain. In desperation he amputated the toes of his left foot, using a jackknife. When found by a squad of Canadian Mounted Police, McCleery still was bravely fighting for life. They rushed him to Fort Norman, where surgeons amputated one foot. You will be glad to know that this heroic man will live. And isn't it a monumental lesson to the rest of us, his courage and grit in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles? At times, all of us get discouraged, often on account of obstacles and disappointments that are trivial compared with the hardships endured by McCleery. Surely his example should be kept in mind and give us the determination to battle and overcome our problems. McCleery showed what is possible for the person who refuses to admit defeat.

EFFECTIVE PLAN TO BETTER LIVE STOCK

Tried Out With Much Success in Many Tennessee Counties.

More Profitable Results Obtained From Community Sales Than Those Covering Larger Sections—Big Aid to Better Sires.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A method that should be found effective in improving live stock in all parts of the country has been tried out with much success recently in Tennessee, says a report to the United States Department of Agriculture. It consists of a series of county sales of purebred sires of all kinds.

The sales have consisted largely of beef bulls, dairy bulls and boars, although a few rams also have been included. The sales are advertised intensively in the counties in which they are held. Small advertisements and posters are used, and for some time before the sale the local papers run articles on the value of purebred sires. In that state it has been found that better results are obtained from the county sale than from sales covering a larger section or from state sales. Farmers are more apt to attend the sales where they can haul the purchases home or ship only a short distance. At a number of these sales the number of sires sold has varied from 20 to 60. One of the big advantages is that good blood produced in the county remains there and improves the general run of live stock instead of being scattered far and wide.

The department looks upon this plan as an important aid in the Better Sires—Better Stock movement.

Good, bright, alfalfa hay saved from the last cutting will come in handy this winter when green feed is scarce.

If the thought ever comes to you of crossing breeds, forget it. It's a step backward in the chicken business.

Weeds and insects are more easily controlled by practicing a rotation because, for different crops, the soil is worked at different seasons of the year, and thus weeds which are prevalent at one season may be destroyed by growing a spring crop and those prevalent in another season by growing a crop for which the ground is worked in the fall. The same is true of insects which affect one crop but not another; thus, by rotating crops on a field insects are also largely destroyed.

A Christmas Eve In Camp

By F. H. Sweet

ALF a dozen unshaven, red-shirted miners were gathered about the dingy counter of Bilger's, the one store in camp. It was Christmas eve, and they wanted something extra for their dinner on the morrow—just to keep them in mind of the day, they said. But there was little novelty in the forlorn remnant of cans upon the shelves, or in the half-empty barrels and boxes under the counter and massed in the corners of the room. One man found a stray box of sardines, and took possession of it with the remark that, while it was not "Christmasy," he could have the satisfaction of knowing he was eating the only sardines in camp; another drew out a can of Boston baked beans from behind a squadron of tomatoes; while a third, of more investigating and determined turn of mind, hunted among the boxes and barrels until he actually discovered a can of Cape Cod cranberries.

This brought the entire group of Christmas hunters into a compact, envying circle; and while they were anxiously debating the pro and con—especially the con—of a division of spoils, the door opened quietly and a scow-shouldered, watery-eyed man entered. "Have you got any toys?" he asked, hesitatingly. The storekeeper stared, and unthinkingly, as though by preconcerted arrangement, the group around the canned representatives from Cape Cod turned and stared also. "Any—what?" the storekeeper asked blankly. "Toys," the man repeated looking at the encircling faces with abashed embarrassment—"things to play with, I mean, like children have at Christmas. You see," with a curious mingling of apology and pride in his voice, "my little ten-year-old boy came in on the stage just now—clean from his grandpa's, back to Missouri. I've been sendin' for him these two years, but couldn't seem to get to it till I struck a vein last month."

He lurched heavily against the counter. His watery eyes began to fill, partly through his condition and partly from some long dormant tenderness which was beginning to reawaken. "The boy's consider'ble childsh," he went on, rousing himself a little at the consciousness of being listened to by men who usually passed him without recognition, "an' likes things to play with. So, bein' it's Christmas, an' he jest comin', why, I thought mebber I'd better hunt some toys."

"Of course," cried Dobson, the sheriff, heartily; and "Of course," "Of course," came promptly from others of the group. And then they looked about the store inquiringly, eagerly, in search of something that would please a ten-year-old boy who was childish. But there was little they saw; only huge miners' hoots, pyramids of picks and shovels and blankets, barrels of flour and beans and pork; and on the shelves, tobacco and canned goods, and a small assortment of earthen and tinware; and then, at the far end of the store, a bar for the accommodation of those who were thirsty. There were no dry and fancy goods and notions upon the shelves, no show-cases upon the counter, no display in the one dingy window. Such things would begin to make their appearance only with the coming of the first woman, and that was not yet.

"Rather a slim show for playthings, Dobson," said the owner of the cranberries, after a fruitless search with his eyes from one end of the store to the other. Don't s'pose a pack o' playin' cards would do?" as his gaze paused hopefully on an extensive assortment of that popular article. "They has pictures on 'em."

"Wouldn't do at all," answered Dobson decidedly. "They ain't moral; an' the first kid who patronizes us has got to be brought up moral. Say, you," to the watery-eyed man, who was edging towards the bar at the far end of the store—"none o' that!"

"None o' what?" asked the man querulously. "I ain't steppin' on your toes."

"No, but you are on the kid's. See here." His voice had an incisive ring which had made many stronger men tremble. "You ain't walkin' the same line you was twenty-four hours ago. Then you was a poor, no-count drunkard, who'd a right to dig his grave without opposition from nobody; now you're markin' out a trail for that kid o' foller. See? Me an' my friends here ain't no call to interfere between ather an' son," dropping his voice to an easy, familiar tone, and placing a hand encouragingly upon the tremulous shoulder, "so long as the father makes a good deal; but when he lumps,"—his voice was still soft, but the steely glint returned to his eyes—"then me an' my friends step in. Sabe? Bein' the first kid in camp, we've con-tituted ourselves his guardian—just like every man in the place will do soon's they hear of his bein' here."

He turned back to his companions. The watery-eyed man, after one long, wistful, farewell glance toward the bar, resumed his fruitless search of the goods. There was nothing now to divide his attention; he knew the men with whom he had to deal, and realized that henceforth the bar was to be as far removed from him as though a wall of granite intervened. But, to his credit be it said, even with the realization came a new firmness to his eyes.

"What's that on the top shelf?" he asked suddenly. "That? Oh, that is—I dunno," hesitated the storekeeper, as he took down the object in question and examined it critically. "It got in with some goods a year ago, an' has been up there ever since."

"Why, you chump!" cried the cranberry owner derisively, "not to know a jumpin' jack when you see one! I've bought lots of 'em to home for the children. See!" and he pulled a string which sent the acrobat tumbling up over the top of his red pole. "Just the thing for a kid."

"Just the thing," repeated the watery-eyed man, drawing a small bag of gold dust from his pocket: "It'll make the boy laugh."

As he was going out, the owner of the cranberries stepped to his side. "Here, take this along with you," he said, relinquishing the can to which he had been clinging so fondly. "It'll help to make out a Christmas for the boy."

"And this, too." "And this," added the owner of the sardines and the owner of the baked beans; and then Sheriff Dobson pushed before them and slipped something bright and heavy into the hand which held the jumping-jack.

"It's a nest-egg for the kid," he said gravely. "Now you better go home an' fill up his stockin'; an' to-morrow you can tell him Merry Christmas from us all."

The Holiday Spirit

CAN there be anyone who does not polish up his holiday spirit by reading Dickens' "Christmas Carol"? Is there anyone who does not give himself the fun of skimming down the slide with Bob Cratchit and laughing at his comforter, "three yards long, exclusive of the fringe," stream out behind him like the woolly tail of a kite? Is there anyone who does not creep up the cold staircase with Old Scrooge and shiver into his dismal room there to eat a small and lonely bowl of porridge with the crusty old gentleman? Is there anyone who does not love Tiny Tim and his wee, brave crutch? And Mrs. Cratchit, who can cook a goose to beat anything thus far accomplished in the history of mankind? And then, when we follow the Spirit of Christmas Past, can anyone fail to be moved by the forlorn little figure of Old Scrooge as a lad, left in loneliness at school during the holidays? Could anything be more pathetic?

Has anyone such astounding control of his feet that he can prevent them from dancing at Mr. Fezziwig's party? And where is the impossible person who can suppress a cheer at that remarkable gentleman's performance with his legs? "If such there be, go, mark him well," for he has no pleasant places in his heart for these delightful humors.

And then the damsel with the "lace tucker"! Dear me, what a cnase she gave one interested young man in Blind Man's Buff! And how he paid her up for it in a certain shadowy corner of the room; how he did, indeed! But she liked it. Oh, yes, she liked it very much indeed, did the damsel with the lace tucker!

Then to return to the Cratchit family, who is there to resist the simple toast of Tiny Tim, a toast of five words that encompasses the hope of all men:

"GOD BLESS US, EVERY ONE!"

Life Lines BY H.M.C.

LET'S snoop around the attic. In a journey of surprise, let's finger through the bundles stored away. Let's open up the letters that perhaps have cheered our eyes, or maybe made them moist in olden days.

An ancient trunk is hidden in a corner. Shades of dust! The kind that grandma used in days of yore. Its sides are warped and wrinkled and its trimming badly mussed; no use today for what 'twas purchased for.

We open up the cover and it creaks—the hinges break! We find a pack of love notes, tightly bound. A knitted shawl, a bonnet and a frock of ancient make, are 'mong the dusty relics that are found.

A love note tells the story of when grandma was a girl, and courted by the men about the town. We find one from the lover whom she married later on, and others from the ones on whom she'd frown.

The shawl? A faded purple, with its stitches giving way. 'Twas given her when she was just a bride. And now we can remember when its owner passed away, 'cause grandma had the shawl on when she died.

And now that quaint old bonnet which was style back in its day. And too, the frock which looks like masquerade. Why, grandma wore the bonnet when her hair had turned to gray; the frock when in the Easter Day parade.

Sweet memories, these relics that are rotting, sad to say. Just heirlooms, yet we feel that we are blessed; for we can look them over and enjoy them all today; then gently lay them back again to rest.

The Piper in the Subway

By Christopher G. Hazard

THERE is a contrast to the holiday atmosphere as one passes into the dark and damp underground way out of the great depot. A chill strikes upon the soul as well as upon the body. The passer hurries on to escape into the light and cheer of the street. He hugs his Christmas packages a little closer and tries to whistle himself into something like gaiety.

Suddenly he is startled and helped by the tones of a merry tune and discovers the old blind man who has long haunted the dismal place. For years this unfortunate has made it his one business to stand there and pipe up the falling spirits of travelers. His face has refused the marks of darkness and his soul has kept gladness behind its closed and curtained windows. As one stops to leave a token and a word of appreciation with him he says, "Thank you; I don't know as I ever did anybody any good; some people don't like it."

CHRISTMAS LETTERS

SOMETIMES a letter means more than all the cards and gifts in the world. Why not send a Christmas message by letter this year? A bright holiday seal stuck at the top will introduce your remarks in a jolly fashion, and then you may continue with whatever you think friendly and suitable. This is a cheap method in the actual expenditure of money, but a rich outlay of thought for those you love. Have you not discovered that something somebody does just for you is more precious than a present bought in a hurry? Christmas letters bring great joy. Try some and see!

The Evergreen Tree

By Christopher G. Hazard

THE servants had retired and left the old lady alone. She sat before the decorated and lighted tree that was burdened with gifts that seemed to have no destinations. For Mrs. Stone was long past the wanting of gifts and no companions, young or old, sat with her, because she wished to be alone with her memories.

She was not as alone as she seemed to be, for, in the great chair opposite to hers memory placed the fairy figure of the child who had glanced and danced about the house and under the Christmas tree of long ago. Beside her there sat one who seemed to lay his hand again upon hers in happy and satisfied affection, while there bent over her the strong and tender youth who was once her hope for later years. Again the old house seemed full of joy, and noisy merriment drove out the deathly stillness, while the tree that is always green spoke of the immortality of happiness.

The next day, when the servants dismantled the evergreen tree, it was found that every gift was marked with a name, and they were busy that Christmas morning in distributing new happiness about the neighborhood.

The Christmas Dolly

"Oh, George, now I know what you were talking of when I came to wake you," Molly said, running her fingers through his tousled hair. "Tell me about it."

"I was reading some of the letters from Henry, for I'd been thinking of him all day," began her husband. "The last letter I read was the one we got from him last year just before Christmas, in which he told us how he and Jane were planning Christmas for the youngsters, and how he hoped that another year he would be home with us. I sat here recalling the many Christmases you and I had planned for our children. Molly, do you remember the year we had the Uglov boys over for Christmas eve?" he excitedly continued, half rising from his chair as the happy past came back to his mind in jumbled snatches. "I can see them now, the four boys and two girls sitting around this very stove, telling the Christmas stories which they had learned in school. Then, how their eyes bulged and their mouths opened when Santa came into the room. The children danced with glee, but the girls were a bit timid. The boys, however, were real chummy and asked Santa many embarrassing questions about his trips.

All this he said slowly, pausing now and then so that he could live it over again. He looked up into Molly's face, for she had been very quiet, and there he saw big tear drops rolling slowly down her thin cheeks which now showed a delicate pink flush.

"Well, well, Molly," began her husband.

"Don't, George, I know it's foolish for me to cry, but I wish we could have a tree and children to fuss for. Christmas comes and goes now without much excitement and it makes me feel as though I'm getting awfully old."

"Molly, let's have a tree and we will get ready for Christmas just as we did long ago."

The next morning, the happy couple took a trip to the woods to choose a tree. By the twenty-second of December, all the things were finished. George found Molly sitting before the fire looking very sober.

A Christmas Dream

By LUELLA
KERSTEN

THE spacious farm house living room was unlighted and quiet. The outlines of several large armchairs were visible here and there about the room and made it look temptingly restful. The table which stood between the two windows was not untidy but held several opened books and many letters strewn about a letter file.

One of the large armchairs stood in front of the massive coal stove in which the blue flames danced like little elves upon the red coals, defying heartily the howling wind outside. Some one seemed to have been present recently. The chair held a bath robe, the cord of which dangled carelessly on the floor, and the tassel of which rested upon an open letter below it. Some one had been reading old letters and that person was cozily nestled in the bath robe. His tousled head, of grey rested on the back of the chair. He was sleeping and certainly was having the happiest of dreams for a smile took possession of his face. The flames joined in the happy mood by dancing higher and faster. Even peaceful and happy hours have endings. Mrs. Bohnenstock had come quietly into the room and gently shook her husband.

"No, no, Helen," said the man without opening his eyes, "I am too old to dance and romp."

"Helen? Whom are you talking of? I do believe you have been dreaming," answered his wife.

At the sound of her voice, he was entirely awakened and arose from the chair. He staggered about before he regained all consciousness and his arms and legs ached from their cramped position. "I guess I've been dreaming, Molly, it seems as though I'd been asleep for a whole year. Molly dear, why didn't you call me? My stock must be fed and it's way past feeding time now."

"Do not worry about your stock, George. It has all been taken care of. John Uglov came over this afternoon and we talked about our Christmases when our boys were small. When it began to grow dusk, he said that I should not disturb you and that he would feed the stock."

"Well, Molly, so you and John talked over the Christmases we had with our little boys," said Mr. Bohnenstock sinking back into his chair and beckoning his wife to sit on the arm of it. "I am glad to see that others miss those beautiful holidays and the whole month before, when the air was full of mysteries."

"Oh, George, now I know what you were talking of when I came to wake you," Molly said, running her fingers through his tousled hair. "Tell me about it."

"I was reading some of the letters from Henry, for I'd been thinking of him all day," began her husband. "The last letter I read was the one we got from him last year just before Christmas, in which he told us how he and Jane were planning Christmas for the youngsters, and how he hoped that another year he would be home with us. I sat here recalling the many Christmases you and I had planned for our children. Molly, do you remember the year we had the Uglov boys over for Christmas eve?" he excitedly continued, half rising from his chair as the happy past came back to his mind in jumbled snatches. "I can see them now, the four boys and two girls sitting around this very stove, telling the Christmas stories which they had learned in school. Then, how their eyes bulged and their mouths opened when Santa came into the room. The children danced with glee, but the girls were a bit timid. The boys, however, were real chummy and asked Santa many embarrassing questions about his trips.

All this he said slowly, pausing now and then so that he could live it over again. He looked up into Molly's face, for she had been very quiet, and there he saw big tear drops rolling slowly down her thin cheeks which now showed a delicate pink flush.

"Well, well, Molly," began her husband.

"Don't, George, I know it's foolish for me to cry, but I wish we could have a tree and children to fuss for. Christmas comes and goes now without much excitement and it makes me feel as though I'm getting awfully old."

"Molly, let's have a tree and we will get ready for Christmas just as we did long ago."

The next morning, the happy couple took a trip to the woods to choose a tree. By the twenty-second of December, all the things were finished. George found Molly sitting before the fire looking very sober.

"Molly, why do you look so blue? This is the time for everyone to be happy."

"I know it, but, George, I think our fun is over. All our planning is done and we have no one here to enjoy it. No children's voices to sing the lovely Christmas songs. Oh, I shall miss it," she said sobbing.

"We still have three days in which to find children. We are going to have a Christmas just as we want it. I feel as though this will be the happiest."

The next night, they again were cuddled in the big armchairs drawn before the stove. Both of them were deep in thought, wondering and hoping. Both of them started when the telephone rang, breaking up their thoughts. George answered and was astonished when he heard a telegram read to him. He hung up the receiver with a slam and ran over to Molly. He threw his arms about her, picked her up and carried her around.

"George, tell me about it. What has happened?"

"Molly, I can't talk, I'm so happy. I knew we would find children but now I mustn't keep you in suspense any longer. It was a telegram like this. 'Family coming to spend Christmas on the farm. Arrive on noon train tomorrow. Henry.'

"No, No, Helen."

Now Molly took her turn in rejoicing. She danced about the room. Her face was pink and her eyes sparkled like an overjoyed child's. "We must get the toys ready for the children," she said, and immediately went off to make a new dress for a doll.

The next noon, George and Molly were standing on the station platform, trembling with excitement. The bystanders could tell that something unusual was happening for the old people. Finally the train came.

"There they are! I see Jane and Helen. Where is Henry?" cried Molly.

"Here, Mother," answered her boy and he picked her up and kissed her. "Didn't know me, did you?"

That afternoon, the big doors to the living room were kept closed. The children suspected nothing for they were busy exploring the farm.

In the evening after they came from church, the doors to the living room were opened; the children were so happy that they danced about the tree and excitedly grabbed one parcel after another. In their excitement they could not untie the packages so their father and mother and grandparents were called upon to help.

Helen came to her grandfather with all of hers, but Junior was not so partial. After the children had seen all their presents, and the others had exchanged theirs, Helen and Junior sang songs and spoke Christmas pieces. After the candles were lighted, little Helen came tripping over to her grandfather, "Come dance around the tree with me and my dolly, Grandfather."

"No, no, Helen! I'm too old to dance and romp," he answered.

"George," interrupted Molly "those are the same words you used the day I found you sleeping in the armchair after reading old letters."

"Well, well, that's so," exclaimed George, "This Christmas has been exactly as I dreamed it."

Henry leaned over and whispered to his wife, "I'm glad we came. I didn't know how much it would mean to them."

Easily Managed

YOU must believe in Santa Claus
If in neglect you would not pause
And see the holidays drift by
And bring you nothing but a sigh.

He may not greet you if you wait
In idleness and selfish state
For him upon his way to start
To grant the wishes of your heart.

For he his ways makes known to men
By means that are beyond our ken,
And as his journeying vast is made
He uses many a masquerade.

So if a scarcity you fear
In the supply of Christmas cheer,
Just hustle like a willing elf,
And he old Santa Claus yourself.

× The radio nuts in Kendrick heard a concert Wednesday night, given by the "City Dye Works Choral Society" of Los Angeles. One of the bad features of the present system of radio broadcasting is that there are so many sending stations with the same wave length that one has to listen to several concerts at the same time. One of them may be going on in California, another in Alberta and maybe a third in Texas. The radio instruments are "in tune" but the concerts may be rendering 3 different selections at the same time, so the harmony is not all that could be desired. However, Otto Schupfer and A. V. Dunkle both have "radio ear" and can no doubt differentiate the various concert numbers that come on the air at the same time.

A. L. Jones drew the first prize of $10.00 at the Kendrick Store last Friday. Mrs. R. Murphy drew the second prize of $5 and A. L. Jones the third prize of $2.50. Out of over 1,000 numbers Mr. Jones was lucky to draw two prizes.

Win One and Lose One

The basketball game between the Kendrick and Kooskia high school teams, played in the local gymnasium last Friday, resulted rather disastrously for the Kendrick girls. The score for the visitors was something over 50 and as the locals made a decidedly smaller score there is no need for a comparison at this time.

The boys' game was a dandy and was pronounced by the spectators to be the best game of the season. Kooskia has a splendid team and their defeat here was the first they have suffered this season. The score was 23 to 21 in favor of Kendrick boys.

Walter Thomas referred a very satisfactory game and was decidedly fair to both teams.
