Fattening Beef Calves on Grain

More Skill Required Than Is Necessary in Preparing Older Animals.
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
During recent years live stock markets have experienced a constantly increasing demand for well-fattened beef animals weighing from 800 to 1,200 pounds and this demand, says the United States Department of Agriculture, must necessarily be supplied by heaves from twelve to twenty months old. The fattening of this class of heaves requires more skill than is necessary in the production of animals marketed at more mature ages, on account of their tendency to grow rather than to fatten.
Various Phases of Problem.
The various phases of the problem of fattening calves for market is dealt with in Farmers' Bulletin 1416, Fattening Beef Calves, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, including discussions on how to procure calves to be fattened as yearlings, type of calves suitable for fattening, breeds suitable, importance of good cows and bulls, management of the farm breeding herd, differences in methods of feeding fall and spring calves, feeding the calf from birth to weaning time, dehorning, castration, vaccination, equipment and shelter, and marketing.

Unless the cows in the herd are exceptional milkers, calves intended for fat yearlings should be started on corn, kafir, milo, barley, wheat, or oats, when from four to six weeks old, says the bulletin. Nothing so stimulates the growth and early maturity as milk fresh from the dam, but in all cases calves should be fed liberally on grain for at least one month before weaning time. Every effort should be made to get the calves through the weaning period without loss of their baby fat. The grain ration should be increased so as to permit as little change in their rate of growth and fattening as possible.
Some feeders build "creeps" in the pastures or lots so that the calves can get their grain without disturbance by the cows. Creeps consist of small pens with openings which permit only the calves to enter. These openings may have rollers on each side to prevent bruising the calves.
Problem of Weaning.
Calves from heavy-milking cows should be weaned gradually. If they are running with the cows the weaning should be begun by keeping them up and allowing them to suck only twice each day for five or six days, after which they should be allowed to suck but once each day for a similar period. Then one day's sucking may be omitted, and later two days. Thus the entire weaning takes ten to fifteen days. The calves of cows giving little milk should be weaned abruptly by separating them as far as possible.
Fall calves should not be weaned until after the cows and calves are on grass. Spring calves should either be kept on grass after weaning in the fall or be given some succulent feed, such as silage. It is advisable to provide them with winter pasture, such as wheat, oats, rye, or barley, when soil and climatic conditions permit.
A copy of the bulletin may be secured, as long as the supply lasts, free upon request from the United States Department of Agriculture.

Last Finishing Touches Help to Show Animals
There are a good many little last-minute finishing touches that will help make an animal show to best advantage, advises John W. Bartlett, dairy husbandman at the New Jersey State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.
From now until show time every available minute must be used to train the show cattle to lead and pose. This means considerable work and is an every-day task. The leadman should walk backward slowly and teach the animal to follow gracefully. This means that the animal's head is held high and that when led into line to be judged she stands with her feet squarely under her body. Attention must be paid to the condition of the feet of each animal. If they are irregular they may be pared down with a chisel or knife.
It is not too early to start polishing horns. This can be done by scraping with a piece of glass or rasping with a rounded file. The next step is to apply emery cloth vigorously until all rough places are removed. Following this a paste of sweet oil and pumice stone should be rubbed on the horns until they feel hot. They are then ready for the final polishing with a strip of cloth applied as though shining shoes. Clipping brings best results when done just before the show. If the skin and hair seem dirty, the body of the animal should be washed with soap and water and rubbed dry. Blankets are to be used at all times during the last days previous to showing. Plenty of grooming helps to make the hide pliable and gives the hair more bloom. Feed the show animal hay rather than grass during the last two weeks, as grass-fed animals are apt to lose flesh at show time when hay only is available.

Not every dairyman appreciates the need of the dairy cow for water. Scientists tell us that she requires four pounds of water for every pound of milk produced.
Those who are using mechanical milkers should never overlook the importance of keeping the machine and its parts scrupulously clean. If this is not done the milk or cream is bound to be off flavor.
When the hens and chickens are crowded, lice multiply especially rapidly. Crowding poultry is bad at any time, but especially so in hot weather and with growing chicks. It stunts their growth and causes great loss in that the pullets never attain their full possible value.

Ewes Often Overlooked
Every ewe that does not raise a good lamb and fleece should be culled. Usually from one-third to two-thirds of the income from the flock is from wool, so that the fleeces of breeding ewes are important. Ewes that are weak in the back, shallow bodied, narrow chested, high in the flank, light in the hind quarters, leggy and poor milkers, should be weeded out.
