"IN UNION THEIR IS STRENGTH"

Since the general price to bogged of 1921 farmers have suffered acutely. They have sold in a glutted market and purchased in a restricted one. They have contracted early at a low price to secure ready money. They have delivered to the speculator the profits arising from better prices at a later date. Four millions of them have competed against each other as individual sellers instead of organizing and marketing their produce thru a cooperative plan. Overproduction on the one hand and under organization on the other have plagued and impoverished them.

Mr. Stone of the federal farm board says that "one of our greatest problems is to make the farmer co-operative minded. We want him to organize" and President Hoover thinks the farm board's greatest service will be that of leading the movement toward cooperatives.

Farmers come of sturdy pioneer stock; they are strongly individualistic; they like to act alone. Only one third of the six million farmers of the United States have made any effort to unite. The time has come, however, when they must pull together, otherwise they will continue to be plucked, like the proverbial goose.

COMMITTEE WOULD POOL GRAIN

A farmers committee meeting was held in Moscow Saturday night for the purpose of forming a regional grain marketing pool. A group of nine men, previously appointed to act for the farmers, took first steps toward cooperating with the federal farm boards program.

The committee also went on record in favor of an educational program to show the farmers the advantages of pooling grain.

Congressman Burton L. French and R. B. Hefelblower, agricultural economist at the University of Idaho, were present to advise the committee and to explain details of the farm relief bill.

DEPART FOR VIRGINIA

Mrs. Joday Long, her mother and Miss Lillian Long left Wednesday for Chilhowie, Virginia. They will travel via California, stopping a week at Berkeley. They will travel by way of Salt Lake, the Royal Gorge, and the Grand Canyon, thence through Kansas City, St. Louis, and Nashville, Tennessee.

BIG BEAR RIDGE

Mrs. C. Lundquist of Moscow spent Sunday with her sister, Mrs. James S. Nelson.

Misses Mildred, and Othella Kleth entertained the Luther League at their home Friday evening of last week; about forty being present. Games were played on the lawn and everyone enjoyed the evening thoroughly. A nice lunch was served by the hostesses.

Mrs. Mary Holseth of Spokane is visiting with her son Pete Holseth and family near Deary.

Mrs. Newt Meneely and children of Moscow have been visiting Mrs. Lean Ingle and other friends here. The Meneely family were former residents of the ridge.

Mrs. Ernest Jones received a telegram stating her father had passed away Thursday morning at his home at Derby, Iowa.

The entire community have expressed regrets of having the Knepper and Mac Pherson families move from our midst. Both families have always worked faithfully for the betterment and upbuilding of the community at large, and it is needless to say they will be greatly missed, not only in Kendrick but by the people on the surrounding ridges as well.

The well wishes of their many friends will follow them to their new home.

The Union Sunday School picnic was largely attended Sunday. A very interesting program consisting of special music and a splendid address by Dr. Mason from the U. of I. was enjoyed by all.

Mr. and Mrs. Kester Dammarell, who are on a two-weeks vacation, arrived in Kendrick Wednesday from their home in Reubens. After visiting relatives here for a few days, they will go to Kellogg, Idaho for an outing with friends who live there.

ALASKA, OUR SCENIC FRONTIER

By Rev. CLAUDE W. GROTH

The religion of the Eskimo has been one of superstition to a great extent, and even when he has been converted to Christianity, it is difficult for him to rid his mind of superstitious fancies and his life of superstitious practices. And the adventurous white man has oftentimes so corrupted the native as to destroy practically all the influence Christianity has had upon him.

The Presbyterian the Methodist the Episcopalian and the Greek Catholic churches are the main churches operating in Alaska. If one wants a good idea of the work of the Presbyterian church, he might read some of S. Hall Young's books. If he wishes to learn about the work of the Episcopal Church a good book to read is "Ten Thousand Miles with a Dog-Sled" by the late arch deacon Hudson Stuck. As a church the Methodist church is not so strong in Alaska, as the Presbyterian, but there have been several missions established beside the regular churches. There is a hospital at Nome, a mission at Unalaska, and a Home for native orphan children at Seward. These are maintained by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I'll tell more of that later.

From the above one can see that the Christian religion has had opportunity to touch the lives of the native population. The habits of the Indian are much the same as those of the Eskimo, except that not being so far north he doesn't have to wear such warm clothing. He is a little different in disposition and temperament, is perhaps, a trifle more energetic, and in appearance, somewhat larger in stature.

The Indians of Southeastern Alaska are noted for their great totem poles. The Aleuts are especially noted for their basket-making. It has been the writer's great pleasure to see a large collection of these trophies, and there certainly are really beautiful works of art produced by these people. The Aleuts make a basket of grass, called the "Attu Basket" which is the finest in the world for a basket of woven grass.

The Aleuts because of their white blood are more progressive, and intellectual than the Indians or Eskimos. They are musical, and some of them will really make their mark in the world. Many in appearance so greatly resemble the whites that they might often pass for white persons. Occasionally one sees an Aleut with light hair and blue eyes.

Where these native peoples are not taken care of by missions and federal schools, their standard of living is very low, and their education is practically nil. And there are localities where such a condition exists. Any kind of a shanty provides a dwelling-place, and furniture is of the most meager kind. Oftentimes the entire family sleep on the floor. Filth abounds everywhere, and as a result, many natives are dying of tuberculosis, and other serious diseases. The living is from hand to mouth, and oftentimes the native will spend what little money he has for liquor. On some of the Aleutian Islands, such a thing as morality does not exist. In that respect these natives resemble the savage tribes of Africa or of the South Sea Islands.

But the missions and the Federal schools lift these people above this sort of a life, and although, the teaching of better living is difficult, yet much good has been accomplished.

Many missions for the natives have been established in various parts of Alaska. A great many of these are supported by the Presbyterian Church and some by the Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church has several. As my observation has been confined intimately with the work and life of the Jesse Lee Home and Industrial School for Natives, I shall tell in detail about this particular mission, and thus give a general idea of life in the missions.

Jesse Lee Home is located about 2 miles north of Seward, close to a steep rugged mountain. The farm land is made up of glacial deposit. Parts are of gravel formation, but there is a part near the mountain that is a deep rich black loam. As yet only a small acreage is clear-river, 76 miles above Lewiston, by German interests. Important announcements may come at any time, according to W. H. Hill, engineer in charge of surveys. The German company has guaranteed completion of the project in five years. Unconfirmed reports are that the huge plant will be used to manufacture nitrates from the air, to supply current for an electric line down Snake river, and to develop copper deposits in the Seven Devils Country.

Lieutenant N. B. Mamer and Art Walker will hop off from Felt's Field, Spokane, about August 19 on an attempt to set the nations first round trip coast-to-coast nonstop refueling record. Major C. V. Haynes, father of the non-stop refueling idea contends that "the time is not distant when business men will be demanding through airplane service of a non-stop nature from the Pacific to the Atlantic."

Charles P. Whalen, 40, prominent Genesee banker, died Monday night at St. Joseph's hospital, Lewiston, following an operation for ulcers of the stomach. Funeral services will be held Thursday morning from the Genesee Catholic church.
