The groom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Heffel, was attired in a dark suit of oxford gray.

The living room of the Dagefoerde home was decorated with three large baskets of white and yellow chrysanthemums placed before three windows where the couple stood during the ceremony.

Guests present were Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Dagefoerde, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Heffel, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Dagefoerde, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Craig, Rev. and Mrs. Reitz, Miss Alice Sunquist, Otto Dagefoerde, Miss Margaret Dagefoerde, Miss Elizabeth Reitz, Ernest Dagefoerde and the bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Heffel.

Herman Carl Wilken was born at Cameron on March 8, 1894, and lived there until manhood. He enlisted in the army in August, 1917, and was overseas 21 months. After his return he was postmaster at Cameron, and had a store there for several years. For the last nine years he had served as a railway mail clerk. ## KENDRICK COMMERCIAL CLUB IN MONTHLY MEET

The regular monthly meeting and dinner of the Kendrick Commercial club was held in Fraternal Temple Monday night, dinner being served at 6:30 by Mrs. Grace Lind. There were 18 present and a very pleasant meeting was the result.

The first thing on the program was a short skit from the Junior play by Nolan Weeks and "Miss" Don Benscoter (who really fooled quite a few of those present). It was well put on and much enjoyed by those in attendance at the club meeting.

A Miss Wiswall, welfare worker, of Moscow, gave a very interesting talk on child welfare work and suggested that more interest should be taken in that work in this community; that most children in this and other communities were sorely in need of a recreational program, saying she thought help might be obtained through the WPA if such help were needed. She said such programs were handled by qualified persons who had been trained in that work and that it is almost imperative, in order to keep youngsters out of mischief, to have some outlet for their energy. Kendrick is much in need of such outlet, she said, the same as other communities and she urged that this work be taken up in the spring. Her talk was listened to with much interest.

There was considerable discussion of the Boy Scout work, which is at present being carried on by Wm. Van Kleek. There are now about a dozen boys taking active part in this work, but there are many more who are eligible and they are asked to get in touch with Mr. Van Kleek, who will be glad to give them all necessary information concerning the movement. A committee consisting of H. B. Thompson and Wm. Watts was appointed by the chairman to look into the movement and see what is needed to the end that aid may be extended by the club if necessary.

Considerable discussion was also had regarding the irregular and poor attendance at club meetings and an extra effort will be made to have as full a representation of the business and professional men of the town as is possible at the next meeting, which will be held on December 14.

Few seem to realize the real importance of a real live commercial club. But there is one thing sure—Kendrick has received many benefits that would have passed over our heads had not the Commercial club been in existence. It is the duty—and should be considered a privilege—of every man within the city limits—and farmers and out-of-town business men—to attend these meetings and have a part in them. You are more than welcome and your criticism or recommendations will be taken in good part and listened to by those who have been active all these years and are still doing all they can to keep Kendrick on the map. You should be willing to do a little.

Some raise an objection at various times at some of the things that are said or done at these meetings. That is just what they are for—to thresh out problems of a public nature—not for personal peevishness. So make up your mind that you will be one of the boosters next December 14 and will in the future do your part toward making Kendrick a better place in which to live.

Eight-Eight Bridge Club

The Eight-Eight bridge club was entertained in the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Havens last Thursday evening. Delicious refreshments were served by the hostess, after which bridge was played at four tables.

High scores for the evening were awarded to Mrs. F. B. Higley and Lester Crocker, while low went to Mrs. J. H. Cairns and H. B. Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Thompson and Caroline Roos were invited guests.

Their service is free. They do not hire; they merely refer anyone to the person wanting help, so any woman or girl wanting such work can undoubtedly find it at Lewiston.

WILLIAM COX, AMERICAN RIDGE PIONEER, PASSES

William Cox, one of the best-known residents of the American ridge section, died in St. Ignace hospital, Colfax, Monday, where he had been taken on Wednesday of last week, in hopes that something could be done for him. He had been in poor health for the past several months and he failed to respond to treatment, death coming Monday.

The entire countryside will feel the loss of Mr. Cox, as he was one of the leading citizens of this section and he will be missed not only by his immediate family but by his host of friends, who loved and trusted him as a friend and business associate.

William Cox was born in Nova Scotia on August 6, 1864. He came to the United States in 1883. In 1893 he came to the Palouse country and in 1895 settled on what is still the home place on American ridge. On November 2, 1898, he was united in marriage to Lelia Bonnell Kent. To this union eight children were born.

He is survived by his wife, Lelia, five sons—Carroll, Andrew and Warren of American ridge; Willard of Lewiston, and Albert of Moscow. Three daughters—Mrs. Harold Telford of Coeur d'Alene, Mrs. Stanley McDougall of Kellogg and Mrs. Robert Krause of Spokane. One step-son, Edgar Kent of Bovill; four brothers, one sister and 18 grandchildren. He has been affiliated with the Presbyterian church since youth.

Pallbearers were John Woody, J. H. Millard, John Glenn, George Davidson, Warner May and Harry Benscoter.

Funeral services were held in the American ridge church Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with Rev. T. E. Poindexter conducting. Arrangements were made by the Short Funeral parlors.

We wish to thank the many kind friends who so willingly aided us in our late bereavement—in the death of our beloved husband and father, Mrs. Wm. Cox and Family, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cox.

Shooting Pet Deer?

A resident of Big Bear ridge was in Kendrick the first of the week and stated that residents of Kendrick (and a few others) had been coming out to the Atwater lake section and killing deer that had been feeding in that section for a long time and that some of the farmers had been giving them salt, as well as bean straw, and that they were almost as tame as their dairy cattle. While they do not particularly resent the act of killing the deer, they feel badly about it as they had almost become pets and were so considered. Most of the residents are hoping that no more hunters will come, and so request.

A suggestion has been made that the Atwater lake section be made into a game reserve, which would automatically protect the deer and the few elk that are left of the carload planted in this section a few years ago. Such a move is not at all improbable and would guarantee the safety of the farmers' pets.

Killed Falcon Hawk

Archie May brought to town Thursday morning a fine specimen of the Blue Falcon hawk, a bird seldom found anywhere except in the higher mountains. Mr. May took it to Moscow and will have it mounted. It was killed by Bob Weyen while he and Mr. May were hunting. They are the wickedest bird in the air, catching and killing any other bird in flight.

Mrs. Frank Roberts Passes

Word was received in Kendrick Wednesday morning to the effect that Mrs. Frank Roberts, a long-time resident of American ridge, had passed away very suddenly at the home of a daughter, near Spalding, whom she was visiting.

Full particulars will be given next week.

MARKETS HOLD FIRM TONE —FEED GRAINS ADVANCE

Grain markets strengthened during the week ended Nov. 6, influenced principally by sharp advances in corn as colder weather broadened feed demand, according to the Weekly Grain Market Review of the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Wheat was steady to firm despite continued favorable prospects for winter wheat and trade forecasts of a record acreage. Marketings were light while milling inquiry was more active as a result of improved flour trade. Corn advanced sharply as demand broadened while offerings remained relatively light. The prospects of smaller Argentine imports as a result of labor difficulties at ports was a further strengthening influence. Rye continued independently firm, reflecting the active inquiry from millers and distillers.

The general wheat situation remained firm with prices in leading markets mostly steady to slightly higher. The steady upward trend in wheat prices this season has reflected the market reduction in stocks as a result of the three successive below average harvests in North America and last season's short Southern Hemisphere crops. World supplies of wheat at the first of November were around 425,000,000 to 450,000,000 bushels smaller than at the corresponding date last season. United States stocks were apparently about 65,000,000 bushels below those of a year earlier, since disappearance has been somewhat larger than last year and October 1 stocks in all positions for which data are available, totaled 528,000,000 bushels against 584,000,000 bushels a year ago.

Canadian stocks at the first of November were approximately 120,000,000 bushels under those of a year ago with about 170,000,000 bushels remaining for export and carryover at that date. European wheat stocks were apparently 200,000,000 to 250,000,000 bushels below those at the corresponding date last year. North American supplies are probably the shortest of recent years and Indian holdings at the first of November were somewhat under those of a year ago as a result of larger exports. Southern hemisphere supplies at the first of November were around 28,000,000 bushels less than those of a year ago with Australian stocks at the lowest levels in recent years. The reduction in northern hemisphere supplies will be practically offset by larger harvests in Argentina and Australia this season.

Domestic wheat markets maintained a firm tone despite the large acreage and favorable prospects for winter wheat. The winter wheat crop continued to make satisfactory progress in all of the important producing areas east of the Rocky mountains except in some north central plains districts. The Kansas crop made splendid growth, and was furnishing much pasturage in the eastern half of the state. South of Kansas conditions continued favorable, but in the Pacific Northwest the crop was still in need of moisture. Trade estimates at the first of November placed the winter wheat acreage at nearly 52,000,000 acres, which if confirmed would be the largest area ever seeded to winter wheat in the United States. Marketings increased with receipts at the principal winter wheat markets totaling 1,166 cars. A good part of the arrivals went directly to mills and elevators and current offerings were small. Prices of hard winter gained about 1c per bushel at the principal markets with No. 2 hard winter ordinary protein quoted at Kansas City at $1.18 to $1.22. At Chicago No. 2 hard winter was being quoted at $1.20 to $1.23 with interior mills the principal buyers. At Fort Worth No. 1 hard winter was quoted at $1.36 with some No. 1 soft winter from California quoted at $1.26 per bushel, delivered. Offerings of soft winter wheat were limited and prices advanced with other types. No. 2 soft red winter was quoted at the close of the week at St. Louis at $1.21, at Chicago at $1.19 and at Kansas City at $1.19.

Marketings of spring wheat continued to decrease with receipts totaling only 473 cars at Minneapolis and 226 cars at Duluth. Durum markets remained firm with No. 2 amber of good milling quality quoted at about $1.54. Canadian shippers were asking 62c over the Winnipeg November price for No. 2 Canadian

No Official Returns

While no official returns have yet been received regarding the fate of the sales tax, it is conceded that it has gone the way of the republicans. However, it is not a republican child and should not have been treated as such. But, with its sponsor and father—Gov. C. Ben Ross—it was put in the political discard. It would seem that the general sales tax was favored in the northern part of the state, but south Idaho would have none of it, hence its demise on November 23, when the official count will be announced. Word has been received from Ben Diefendorf, commissioner of finance, that it will be necessary to pay until the tax has been counted out.

It was a cold day when the English auctioneer's clerk came to make the sale inventory. He was ushered into the dining room by the butler. There was a bottle of prime old port on the table. "The master's compliment," said the butler. "He thought you might like some."
"Thank you; it is a cold day."
"Then I'll leave it to you, as I've got a lot to do."
Some hours later the butler looked in and found the clerk asleep in an armchair. His inventory was blank, except for this line: "One revolving dining room carpet."

INTERESTING NEWS NOTES FROM OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Kendrick fans will have a chance to see the Tigers in action Friday, November 20 at Bovill. Bovill plays here in the first home game on the 24th. Although the Junior play has conflicted with basketball practice, the boys have been out nearly every evening. The new sweat suits have arrived and the boys present a very natty appearance.

The girls are also having a very good turn out with prospects of several good players. The girls have also ordered new suits. As yet no games have been scheduled.

We are sorry to announce that Miss Jones, our school health nurse, has left for southern Idaho. The nurse from Deary will continue from where Miss Jones left off. All students enrolled in the Kendrick school had been examined by the nurse before she left.

The Junior class play, "Those Lovely Ladies" was presented to a capacity house Wednesday evening, November 11, at the Kendrick Theatre. It's the old story of a boy in love with a girl, and the way in which he won her love was a delight to the audience. The play was presented in a manner that showed hours of work on the part of the instructor and the youngsters.

Hold everything! Here's the old super-snooper with another load of girt!

Some people certainly like to roller skate? A certain V-8 pick-up took a load of high school students to Troy Sunday night. The old super-snooper wonders if they covered up their heads to keep warm. He is inclined to doubt it! Abrams and Leasel seemed to enjoy the cold.

We hear that Delbert Hoffman seems to go for the Jeans. Firt it

Homer and Sidney reported the guitar player couldn't be beat. It appears as if it may be a long race. We don't know any girl guitar players except Veva.

The Juliors seem to think that sneak time is here. Anyway, they took several sneaks in a certain grey Chevrolet, not to mention Ford and Dodge pickups.

Celebrate Anniversaries

The home of Mr. and Mrs. James Emmett was the scene of a very happy occasion, when relatives gathered to celebrate a double event—their silver wedding anniversary and Mr. Emmett's 75th birthday anniversary.

A delicious cafeteria dinner was served to 19 guests. The centerpiece being three birthday and one anniversary cakes—decorated in an appropriate manner.

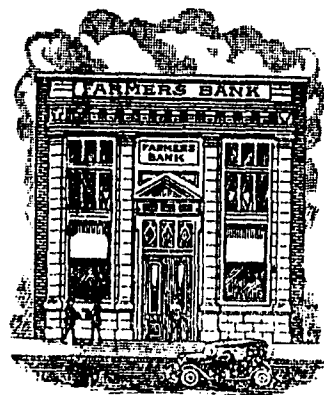

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Clouse, Clarkston; Alvin Tweedy, Peck; Cordelia Emmett, Seattle; Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Porter and sons Emmett and Corwin, Waitsburg; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Emmett and son, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Emmett, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Long and children, Roy and Barbra Jean, and the host and hostess. Four generations were present.

The children presented the couple with a chest of silverware. Other relatives and friends dropped in during the afternoon and evening to wish the couple many more years of health and happiness.

Fred—Have you ever loved before?

Marilyn—No, dear; I have often admired men for their strength, courage, good looks, or intelligence, but with you, Freddie, it is all love—nothing else!

Cash No Sign Of Brains
 Clarence Darrow passed gloomy judgment on this world last Thursday, concluding with this Darrowism: "The conditions of today will happen again and again. The great mass was born poor and destitute and will go through the world poor and destitute."
 He had been asked to tell the National Commercial Teachers' federation "What's Wrong With the World," but he said it would be simpler to say "What Isn't The Matter."
 Nevertheless, the noted lawyer offered these criticisms:

 "The trouble is that the few who own the world are not interested in changing it."
 "Nothing is organized for the benefit of mankind, never has been and it looks now as if it never will be."
 "It's no indication of brains to have money. If you think it is, look at those who have it."
 "All this ballyhoo that prosperity has returned means nothing."

 western durum delivered Duluth. Intermountain markets strengthened with those in the central west but trading was practically at a standstill on the Pacific Coast as the result of strikes of dock laborers and elevator employees. At the close of the week, mills at Denver were offering $1.09 for ordinary No. 2 hard winter and No. 2 northern spring FOB Colorado shipping points. Mills at Ogden were bidding 82c for No. 2 soft white, 89c for No. 2 hard white and 92c for No. 2 northern spring. Near zero weather was restricting trade in that market. Portland prices were nominally unchanged but trading in cash grains was suspended as a result of the strike on the waterfront. Receipts at Puget Sound and Columbia River terminals dropped to 240 cars and flour mills were gradually closing because of strike conditions.
 California markets were steady with trading also materially restricted by unsettled labor conditions. Local demand at San Francisco was limited and trading was confined almost entirely to interior mills not affected by the strike. Sales were mostly at about 90c per bushel FOB interior shipping points for No. 2 soft and hard white wheat testing 60 pounds per bushel. Local mills and industries purchased occasional cars at Los Angeles to meet immediate needs and arrivals were mostly on previous orders. At the close of the week No. 1 soft white was quoted nominally at San Francisco at 96c and at Los Angeles at 97c to 99c per bushel.
 Foreign wheat markets were still somewhat unsettled. Canadian markets strengthened with smaller markets and some improvement in export demand. Prices at Winnipeg advanced about 1c for the week and closed November 6 at $1.09 for No. 1 Manitoba northern. No. 3 Manitoba northern sold at $1.05 and No. 2 Canadian western durum at $1.19 per bushel.
 Pacific Northwest barley markets were dull with strike conditions restricting trading and movement. Quotations were nominally unchanged from those prevailing at the beginning of labor difficulties, when No. 2 bright western barley testing 45 pounds per bushel was quoted at $1.70 per 100, sacked basis, with good malting barley at $2.00 to $2.05 per 100, FOB shipping points.
 Oats markets were somewhat unsettled but the general situation was firmer with the strength in other grains. Trading in Pacific Northwest markets was restricted by labor difficulties and prices were nominally unchanged from those prevailing at the beginning of the strike, with No. 2 white oats quoted at $1.50 per 100 and No. 2 gray oats at $1.45 per 100, sacked basis, Portland.

WIDE-SPREAD EFFECTS OF FOREST FIRES IN IDAHO
 When forest fires remove the timber and other vegetative covering from our mountain slopes, even in a territory where revegetation is rapid, the destructive influence is felt by man and beast alike. This is aptly illustrated in the area in northern Idaho burned over by the huge Pete King forest fire of 1934. A survey of parts of the area was made this year by G. L. Hayes of the Northern Rocky Mountain Forest and Range Experiment Station.
 Measurements and observations made, throughout this section show that even though the winter snows and March rains were greater than usual, huge dust clouds were blown from the ridges as early as last April. Part of the snowdrifts. This rapid drying of clouds was raised from the very edges of the snowdrifts. This rapid drying of the ground was due, primarily, to the lack of cover. What little brush had sprouted during the fall after the fire had been browsed close to the ground by the hungry elk and deer.
 In spite of the greater than usual snowfall during the winter, and summer rainfall more plentiful than that received in four out of the previous seven years, the Selway and Lochsa Rivers reached the lowest levels in the memories of the local residents. In an area where much irrigation is necessary or the population fairly dense, such low river levels would have had serious effects.
 During the summer, rain of near cloudburst intensity fell on the area between the Selway Falls and Three Links cabin in the Nezperce National Forest. The run-off of the water was so rapid that it took an inch or more of top soil from many of the unprotected slopes and washed all the fire-killed timber, soil and boulders from several of the creeks, leaving the streams running on bedrock. The quantity of gravel and debris brought from three different creeks was sufficient to dam temporarily the Selway River in three places. Forest Service bridges were carried away, and roads were nearly impassable, and the Mink Creek telephone line was tangleed in log jams and buried beneath four and five feet of silt in some places. Had there been a layer of dead vegetable matter and plant parts on those slopes, as there had been before the fire, this rain would have been held back to aid tree growth, or let slowly into the streams to hold the river level up late in the season.
 These observations effectively demonstrate the broad and destructive influence forest fires have on soil and water conservation and National Forest administration.
 Brush and herbage alone will not prevent the immediate run-off of heavy rains. After the brush and herbs have occupied the ground for a few years, however, a layer of leaves and other dead plant parts is deposited on the ground. This acts as a sponge to absorb and hold the water which falls, and effectively prevent the run-off, which on bare soil results in heavy erosion and consequent deposits of silt and debris in the valley and river below. Such a brush cover also tends to retard the melting of winter snows which, in this region furnish a large part of the reserve ground water supply upon which the constant level of the streams depends.
 Tree cover, in addition to the brush, is much more effective, however, in slowing the melting of winter snow deposits by the sun and wind and breaks the force of rain in heavy downpours. The fallen leaves and needles from the trees are also very effective in forming the surface "sponge" for catching and holding rain and snow water.
 Much of the area burned in this particular fire had been burned previously, but large areas of green timber were also destroyed.
 That nature hastens to heal the wounds caused by fire is evidenced by the fact that in one short year since the fire, the brush cover has grown up again, in many places to a height of six feet, and grass and herbage are rapidly returning. The deer and elk will find lots of browse this winter and within a very few years the ground surface will again have its protective layer of dead vegetation which will tend to prevent or moderate any recurrence of this year's destructive run-off. Tree seedlings are reappearing, also particularly in the area which had not been burned previous to the fire of last year. The double-burn areas will be slower to regenerate naturally, and it may be generations before they are again tree-covered unless man lends assistance by seeding or planting.

Young Women Back To Kitchens
 Fighting for favorable unemployment figures, the government ordered Germany's younger working women back to the homes and the kitchens.
 A decree designed to make places for older workers transferred male and female workers less than 25 years old to the so-called "voluntary" labor service, an auxiliary of the land service.
 Young women ousted from their jobs were advised they might find new occupations in homes or kitchens.
 The decree, signed by the president of the state employment insurance department who is virtually Germany's labor market dictator, placed the younger workers at the orders of the insurance office to leave their well-paid jobs and find work at small pay in the "voluntary" or the land service.
 Exceptions were youths who have served one year with the "voluntary" service, storm troopers, members of the steel helmet organization and married men supporting families.
 Persons under 25 will be allowed to get jobs if they obtain permission of the employment insurance office, or if they apply for two year's apprenticeship.
 The measure enables the government to fill vacant positions with hitherto unemployed older workers, thus cutting down the official figure of those unemployed.

Chlorine In Dishwater
 Chlorine in dishwater can cut down the respiratory diseases which cause 30 to 45 per cent of American deaths, according to a report made to the American Public Health Association by James G. Cumming, M. D., chief of the bureau of Preventable Diseases, Department of Health, Washington.
 The diseases spread by knives and forks, spoons and plates include pneumonia, tuberculosis, influenza, scarlet fever, measles and the respiratory troubles the public thinks of as traveling through the air.
 The experimenters report that they found an average of 90,000 to 100,000 bacteria per spoon after washing.
 When chlorine was used properly in the washing and rinsing, spoons showed from two bacteria to none.

Time "Goes Crazy" Crossing Ocean
 This doesn't sound logical, but—
 When the trans-Atlantic plane service begins to operate, probably early next year:
 West-bound passengers will make the trip in 18 hours.
 East-bound passengers will have to allow for 28 hours.
 And yet, both trips will take 23 hours actual flying time.
 The five-hour difference between English and American clocks explains the mystery.

BIG FISH PLANTING PROGRAM IN REGION
 More than 125,000 fishermen each year through the streams and lakes of the National forests of the northern Rocky Mountain region. Their numbers are continually growing, regional recreational records show. They create a sizeable problem, because their drain upon the fish supply greatly exceeds the streams' natural productivity, so that fishing in the territory has progressively depreciated.
 In spite of this, however, the sport still attracts fishermen, and fishermen too, in ever-increasing numbers. Many streams that they visit yield poor catches, compared to those of former years. But in others, particularly those which are less accessible, fishing is fairly good, if not very good.
 Behind the continued opportunities for fishing, stand the efforts of the State Fish and Game Departments of Montana, Idaho and Washington, aided by the forest service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and supported and encouraged by the sportsman's associations, prominent among which is the American Wildlife Federation and its state subsidiaries.
 Twenty-nine million fish, obtained from state and federal hatcheries, have been planted in National forest streams during the last four years. Sixteen million were black-spotted trout, 8,000,000 rainbow trout and 4,000,000 brook trout. The others were silver salmon, grayling and Loch Leven, albino and steelhead trout. Eighteen million were from two to four inches in size.
 Distribution was in relation to the apparent drain by fishermen in the National forests. Twenty-two million fish were planted in Montana, 6,500,000 in Idaho and 500,000 in east Washington.
 The region has 23,000 miles of fishing streams and more than 1,000 lakes. Some, easily accessible, are heavily used throughout the fishing season. Others are far back in the National forests, where fishing can be a grand part of a camping expedition. Most of the lakes in the higher elevations, have no fish, since in such places they have to be planted and do not propagate.
 Planting is not the whole solution in meeting the demand for continued fishing opportunities. Improvement in methods of planting and in classes of fish planted must be sought out through experimentation and research, and such improvements must be effectuated.
 Equally important is improvement of streams so they can better support more fish. This work is still in the experimental stage in the region, but much already has been done, principally with CCC labor. The forest service has built nearly 200 small barriers during the last two years to create pools in turbulent streams wherein greater plant and animal life needed by the fish may thrive. Several miles of streams have been cleared of material detrimental to fish production and growth. Barriers have been built at pools under overhanging banks to deflect the current, and thus preserve the pools.

IDAHO HUNTERS KILL TOO MANY ELK; FINED
 Fines of $150 and $300 costs were assessed against each of two hunters in the Nezperce National Forest in northern Idaho, a few days ago, for killing more than one elk apiece in violation of the Idaho State game laws.
 The men, Fred Carson and Irving Crisp, had come from their homes at Euhl, Idaho, in the prairie lands of extreme south Idaho, to the Nezperce forest, just north of Salmon river. They found the hunting too good. They were arraigned before a justice of the peace at Grangeville, Idaho, pleaded guilty, and were fined.
 The Idahoans' arrests was a result of the cooperation of officers of Northern Rocky Mountain National Forest region in the enforcement of state game laws. The national forests of the region, which embraces Montana, Idaho north of the Salmon river, and northeastern Washington, are the homes for most of the big game in this territory. Each Forest officer is a deputy game warden, and these men give material aid to the state authorities in the administration of State hunting and fishing regulation.

U. S. Population 128,429,000
 Estimating the nation's population at 128,429,000 on July 1, the census tureau reported this was an increase of 5,338,000 since 1930.
 An increase of 908,000 over July 1, 1935, also was noted, and Secretary Roper said this resulted mainly from an excess of births over deaths because net immigration for the year ending last July 1 was only 8,000.
 Increased population estimates were given for all states except Rhode Island, Wisconsin, South Dakota, Nebraska, Mississippi, New Mexico, Montana and Arizona, no change being listed for these.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Theodore Gatlin decided to adopt a baby in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But all his love for his foster daughter could not shelter her childhood from the hatred of his wife, who had never wanted her. Their affairs ended in the divorce court but ten-year-old Penelope was given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin, except for two Sunday afternoons a month. On their first day together they set out joyfully for a baseball game. A ball was pitched, struck Penelope on the nose and the neurotic Mrs. Gatlin removed her from the hospital to which her former husband had hurried her. Mrs. Gatlin retired from business, willed Penelope all his money, and was about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ended his life.

CHAPTER II.—Some ten years later in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, a rising young psychiatrist, was presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl whose terrible childhood had left her with a dual personality, for which she "saddled" those who in part responsible. McNamara did not think she was a responsible criminal and obtained Burt's expert testimony in court. Even Lanny, the doctor's faithful office nurse, was won over to her cause despite Nance's hard-boiled exterior.

CHAPTER III.—Nance's criminal record outweighed Doctor Burt's clear explanation of her case and she was sent to San Quentin penitentiary for two years. Lanny visited her and Nance persuaded her to smuggle out a letter, which a confederate stole from her handbag outside the prison walls.

CHAPTER IV.—Nance escaped, although shot, by swimming out to a speed-boat manned by friends and went to Lanny's apartment. Lanny told Chief McNamara, who ordered her to bring Nance to his apartment and phoned for Doctor Burt.

Stephen Burt came out of the bedroom and sat down and stared at the chief of police with grave interest. "Well, my good Javert," he said presently.

"Your good what?"

"I called you Javert. Don't you know who Javert was?"

"Dan McNamara shook his head. "I never picked him up, Doc."

"You wouldn't. He was a character in 'Les Miserables,' a novel by Victor Hugo. He was a fly-cop in Paris, and he pursued an ex-convict named Jean Valjean for twenty years, because he believed the man was a crook. Once a crook, always a crook, was Javert's philosophy. And when he discovered at last he had the goods on Jean Valjean and it was his duty to arrest him, he discovered simultaneously that Jean Valjean was also a good and noble man, which proved extremely embarrassing to Javert."

"I understand how that could be, all right, Doc. What did Javert do then?"

"He climbed up on the railing of a bridge over the Seine, unplugged his shield, threw it into the river and jumped in after it."

"He committed suicide in order to give his man the breaks?"

"Exactly."

"Well," Dan McNamara decided after pondering this a half minute, "I wouldn't be boob enough to do that. He should have made a stool pigeon out of Jean Valjean and maybe he'd have gotten somewhere in his job."

Stephen smiled. He liked this heavy man, with the Celtic face as inscrutable as a Chinaman's. As a specialist in mental diseases he knew the part heredity plays in the formation of character, and one did not have to look at the chief twice to know that he came of courageous ancestry. No vague fears or anxieties in this fellow, Stephen thought. Courageous men are usually honest men; even when they are not honest they are sufficiently courageous to pay the price, no matter how high, for the things they do with their eyes open—to pay it cheerfully and refrain thereafter from whimpering.

"So you're going to protect this girl, are you, Chief?"

"Yeah!" A throaty growl. "Got to, Doc. Got to protect society. Stephen looked puzzled, so the chief continued. "If I let that girl graduate from San Quentin, she'll come out with a broader knowledge of crime and trickery and a greater contempt for society than when she went in. The only kind of criminal I fear is the smart one; I can always catch the boobs promptly, but sometimes it takes a long time to get acquainted with the artistic genius of a real craftsman. They're like writers, Doc. They have a style all their own and you've got to learn their style. And about the time you think you've learned it, you pick up some bird that's guilty and he isn't the man you thought he was. He's just stolen his master's stuff. Nance Belden is too brilliant to turn loose on the world, Doc. She's a leader—a leader of men. She'd make the balls, and her crew would fire them and always be covered up."

He ruffled his pompadour. "Well, Doc, I've gotten her away from her gang. She's lost them and they're lost her. And they must never get her back."

"Would you like to know who they are?"

"Of course. I'm normally curious."

"I can find out for you," said Stephen.

"How?" Dan McNamara looked doubtful.

"Nance will tell me."

"You're crazy, Doc. You don't know the code. They die, but they don't squeal. There is honor in their dishonor, and in their weakness there is a strength that amazes me."

"She wouldn't do it voluntarily, of course, but just now, in her weakened state, I'm sure I could hypnotize her. Get her to look fixedly into a mirror, you know, like this. Once I secure control of her subconscious mind, she'll answer my questions. And after I wake her up she'll have complete amnesia for the experience; she will never know she peached on her pals."

CHAPTER V

The chief smiled. "Of course I know that hypnotism is being used by advanced psychiatrists and particularly by Morton Prince and William McDougall. I've read their books. The modern chief of police isn't modern, Doc, if he isn't a pretty good lay psychologist and psychiatrist. I don't know what a criminologist is, but I suppose he's a bird that studies the criminal actions and tendencies of criminals and tries to reduce crime to its lowest common divisor. That's the bunk. The thing to do is to know their minds and why they act like they do; if you can cure what makes them go, criminology becomes a dead science."

"Yes, I know all about hypnotism and I know something you've forgotten. Your power of suggestion on a patient in the hypnotic state isn't powerful enough to make him steal or commit murder if he's an honest man. His acquired instincts of morality, which lie in his subconscious mind, are too strong for you. And the most powerful acquired instinct in the mind of a crook is that he mustn't squeal. That's his idea of immortality! You try it on Nance Belden and she'll tell you almost anything but who her friends are, where they live and how they make a living."

"Well, we shall see—at another time. Meanwhile, what are you going to do with this girl? You can't keep her here, because that's dangerous unless you have her watched. And whom can you trust to watch her?"

"How about Lanny?"

"Lanny is my office nurse and I cannot get along without her. She's under suspicion now and we've got to kill that. She'll be watched, will she not?"

"I suppose so. Even if I pass the word to lay off her, I can never be sure one of my men won't watch her independently. On a case where it would be a big feather in his cap and mean a lot of publicity to capture a celebrated criminal, lots of dicks prefer to work alone and in secret."

"Then Lanny must not come to your house again. And yet, this girl must be parked somewhere until her wound heals. She's suffering from the shock of this emotional experience now; she's lost considerable blood and suffered some pain, and for five hours she's suffered from exposure. Her garments are soaking wet."

"If she forgot to tell those men to bring some dry clothing for her to hop into, once she got aboard the boat, my heart will just about break. That would be one flaw in a perfect job—and I can't stand flaws."

And Dan McNamara strode into the room where Nance lay with her hand in Lanny's. "Why didn't you tell your friend to bring you some dry clothes?" he demanded.

Nance smiled up at Lanny. "He thinks I'm a nut, after all, Lanny. Why, of course I wouldn't overlook that detail. I changed my clothes, but when we crossed the bay it was rough and there was a police boat on our trail. He had to outrun them—and you do forty miles an hour through a mile of tide-rips and you'll all but drown in the spray!"

"Thank God for that," the chief murmured. "I'm proud of you and your friends, Nance. I hope neither of them was hit."

For the barest fraction of a second Nance hesitated, then answered, "No, they got through all right, but how they did is a mystery. The boat was riddled."

Dan McNamara came back into the living room and on his heavy face was the faintest, most cryptic of grins.

"I'm going to get one or both of Nance's friends, Doc," he exulted.

"One of them was hit, and he'll have to have medical attention. Not that I want to land either one of them for this job, but because I want to give them the once-over. At that they might be somebody we're looking for."

"Did Nance tell you one of them had been hit?"

"No, but she hesitated half a second when she told me neither of them had been hit. She never hesitates ordinarily. Her co-ordination is lightning fast—well, you get so, Doc, that you know when they're lying. Go to the telephone, call up your home and ask if you've had any telephone calls within the past hour."

Stephen obeyed and was informed that a man, who refused to leave his name, had called up three times and had left word he would call again; that he had seemed very anxious to know when the doctor would return.

"I know it—I knew it," Dan McNamara's pride in his own perspicacity was almost juvenile. "I figured Nance would tell them to go to you. And I'll make another prophecy. They'll admit they are friends of hers and that she sent them there. She's told them you're her friend and that you'll not turn them up to me. A wounded crook is always up against it, Doc, unless he knows a crooked doctor. The hospitals and ninety-nine and nine-tenths of the doctors will report to the police when they receive a call from a patient suffering from knife or gunshot wounds. And in this case the radios have broadcast the warning of two hundred and fifty dollars out for Nance too—standing state reward for recapturing an escaped convict."

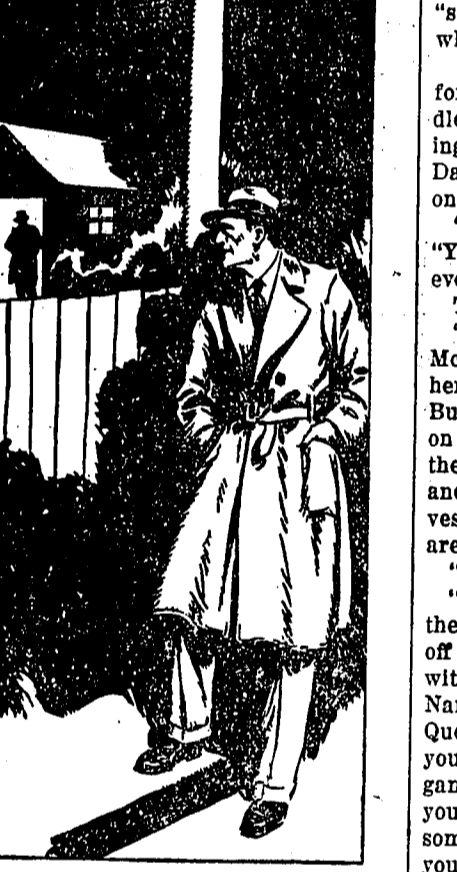

"Come on, Doc. I'll go to your home with you and pick these birds up."

"No, you shall not. I wouldn't turn those two men over to you for ten thousand dollars. They're too—"

"Yes, they have guts. They can be trusted on a particular job I want to put through. Word of honor, Steve. I'll not pinch them. I just want to talk with them."

A block from Stephen's home Dan McNamara got out of the doctor's car. He had already received from Stephen Burt a description of the ground-floor plan of his house. And Stephen had agreed to leave his latchkey under the mat at the front door.

The chief watched Stephen put up his car and enter his home. A light was shining in the entrance hall, and this light Stephen, in accordance with the chief's instructions, switched off.

In about five minutes the chief saw this light switched on and off twice. That meant the doctor had received another telephone message. Then the light was switched on and off ten times. That meant the patient would arrive in about ten minutes, so Dan McNamara hid himself in the deep shadow of a tradesman's entrance at the side of a house across the street, and waited.

In ten minutes almost to the second, a car, with drawn curtains, drove up to the house and two men got out. The chief could see that one of them had to have assistance, so the driver got out and helped the other man half drag, half carry, the wounded man up the steps. Stephen opened the door and the three men entered; immediately McNamara ran across the street and up the front steps behind them, found the latchkey under the mat, opened the door and stepped inside. He could hear voices in Stephen's reception room, so he drew his pistol and stepped silently up to the entrance of it.

"Put 'em up, boys," he ordered cheerfully. He drew back his left lapel and revealed his blue and gold shield. "No necessity to argue in the smoke. This isn't a hanging matter."

He forced the two unbound men to stand with their backs toward him while he ran his facile hands over their persons and relieved each of a pistol. He "broke" both guns and placed the cartridges in his pocket.

"I beg your pardon, Doctor, for entering your house unannounced, but you left your front door unlatched and I couldn't resist. I had a notion these men might call upon you. Just a hunch because the warden tipped us off to watch the home of your office nurse, Miss Lanning. So, while watching the home of the servant I concluded to watch that of the master, also. Sit down, boys. Never mind us, Doc. The man on the table needs all of your attention. Fix him up nicely and let him lie there until I come back. He can't run away, and if he tries, don't you let him. You other men come with me down to the central office till I see if we have anything on you. I don't appear to have the honor of your acquaintance, but we'll look the rogues' gallery over and compare fingerprints. While there's life, there's hope."

"You're all wet, Chief," the driver of the car replied pettily.

"Perhaps—but not as wet as your friends." And McNamara chuckled at his little joke. "You can't do forty an hour through the tide-rips off Alcatraz island without throwing some spray. You got an open fireplace in your house, Doctor?"

Stephen saw that McNamara was pretending they had not previously met. "Yes, Chief. In the drawing room. It's all set."

"I want to warm these boys up and dry them out. They did good work this afternoon and they deserve good treatment. Drop that wounded man long enough to dig up a couple of stiff jolts of spiritus frumenti for my lads, will you, Doc? I always warm a cold man from the outside in and from the inside out."

"Thank you, Chief," both men muttered.

The three retired to the drawing room and the chief tossed one of the men a box of matches. "Fire up," he commanded. "Then draw yourself up to the blaze and drink the grog the doctor will give you. Where's your pal hit?"

"Top of the right shoulder, calf of the left leg and biceps of the left arm."

"So he's the chap that dragged Nance out of the water, eh? He was in the rear cockpit, but you were up front driving the boat. There are forty bullet holes in the rear of that boat." He sighed. "These machine guns certainly spray things. You didn't drop your own machine gun overboard, either. They're too valuable and hard to get. A Thompson, I suppose. A Tommy gun and a Tommy man! Visiting brethren—from Chicago, I suppose. Pardon me a minute while I look for the Tommy gun in your car. And if you want to die in a hurry just try beating it out the back way while I'm gone."

He returned in less than a minute with the one-man machine gun in his hands. "We've got Nance Belden where you dropped her," he announced, "so while you're lapping up that whisky, tell me all about it."

"So Nance told you where to look for us, eh? The man who had handled the motor boat spoke with withering contempt and hatred. Instantly Dan McNamara cuffed him viciously on the side of the head.

"Apologize for that," he roared. "You're so d—d crooked you think everybody else is, too."

The man mumbled an apology.

"No, Nance didn't tell me, you rat," McNamara went on, "and I didn't ask her, because I knew she wouldn't tell. But I did think she'd tip you off to call on this doctor. You dropped her at the home of his office nurse; I put two and two together and decided to investigate—all by myself. And here we are. Got any idea why I came alone?"

"No."

"Because I wanted to save you from the consequences of the job you pulled off this afternoon. I'm in sympathy with that, and as far as I'm concerned Nance Belden isn't going back to San Quentin. And she isn't going back to your gang, either. Now, you play the game with me and I'll play it with you. Double-cross me and I'll hang something hard on you, and you and your friends won't be heard of in public for a long time."

"Nance had no right to be there," the man protested to McNamara. "The poor kid's queer." He tapped his forehead. "But she framed a sweet get-away, if it would work, and we figured it might. So we thought we'd give the girl a hand. She's all right. I've got a blind brother that would have starved to death if it hadn't been for Nance Belden; as for the man the doctor's working over now, Nance took care of his wife while he was in the stir. Helped her when she had a baby. Chief, that girl's a saint. The only trouble with her is that she's a devil, too. You never know how to figure her."

"You've figured her right. She's queer. And what's your wounded friend been doing since he got out of stir? What did he get in for?"

"He got in for bootlegging and he's been bodyguard for a boss bootlegger since he got out."

"H-m-m-m! And what's your specialty?"

"I don't know what line I'll take up, Chief. I've only been out of the United States army disciplinary barracks on Alcatraz island a month. I was a soldier—and I poked an officer."

"Oh, you're the machine-gunner, eh? Learned to shoot in the army, I suppose?"

"If I hadn't, I'd have killed that guard. I could have gotten him if I cared to, but instead I scared him with overs and shorts. Did I sweep the roof of that lookout tower?"

"You certainly did—and rattled the man at the Browning gun there. Well, you're quite a fellow! What does your friend, the chauffeur, do?"

"Delivers bootleg. He took a chance for a friend."

"You may go," said Dan McNamara to the chauffeur. "Take your car and beat it. But I'll remember you and if you pull any rough stuff in this city I'll land you out in the grass. On your way."

The man fled promptly, and Dan turned to the ex-soldier. "I've got Nance out at my house," he explained. "Doctor Burt has fixed her up and I'm not going to turn her in. Neither am I going to turn her out, because she wouldn't be out two hours before she'd be picked up. That saddle nose of hers is a dead-give-away."

The man nodded ingenuously.

"We've got to find a quiet spot for your friend, too," the chief went on meditatively. "A man with three bullet holes in him is in an embarrassing fix—when he's wanted. So we'll take him out to my house, too. That's the only safe place I can think of."

"How about me?"

"You've been a soldier, so I suppose you can carry out orders?"

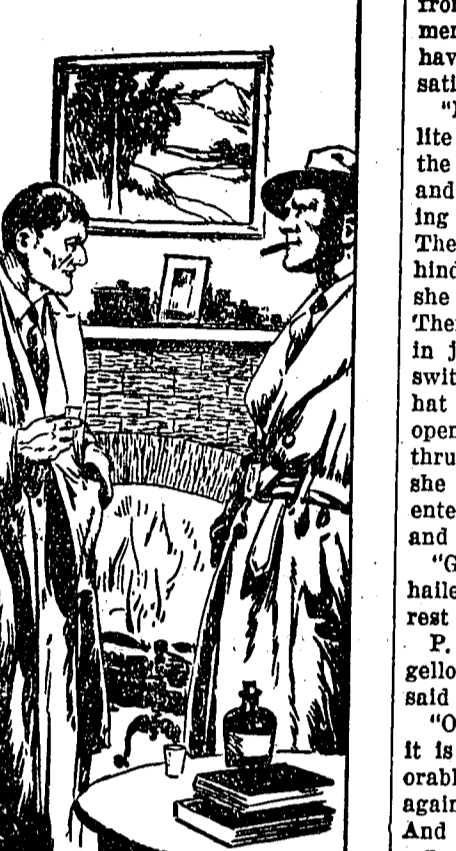

"Yes, sir."

"Well, your orders are to come out to my house, too, and take care of your friends. The doctor will call every day and tell you what to do. And you'll have to do the cooking."

"I can do that, too. Not fancy, but they can eat it."

"All right, you've got a job and a holding-up place as well. I'll go home now and get my car and come back for you and your friend. Meanwhile don't you get cold feet and disappear. I want to talk to you some more. I want to find out all about Nance Belden, and you and your friend might be able to give a line on her."

"I don't know anything about her,

"Don't Know Anything About Her Chief."

Chief, except that her real name is Penelope Gatlin."

Dan McNamara clasped his corrugated brow in both hands and pondered. "Gatlin! Gatlin! Penelope Gatlin! Now, where have I run across that name in my business? I don't usually forget names, and I seem to remember I had a call once for somebody by that name or else somebody by that name called on me. It was a long time ago. I'll have to look that up—I wonder if there's anything in the files at headquarters."

It was midnight before Nance Belden's two friends were installed with her in Dan McNamara's house. Lanny looked both men over carefully and confided to the chief that she wouldn't trust either one of them as far as she could throw a bear by its tail, to which Mr. McNamara replied that one of them couldn't raise any devilry if he wanted to, while the other dared not. Moreover, this latter was the only practical nurse he could secure. A trained nurse might talk; on the other hand, this friend of Nance's had been educated to keep his mouth shut. "And a very great virtue," McNamara added. "His freedom is in my keeping and my honor is in his, so we have to trust each other. Besides, it's high time you got home."

"How about those two cops waiting for me?"

"Greet them kindly, ask them their business and invite them to talk it over before they can tell you what it is. When they tell you permit them to search your home, and be cheerful about it."

The phone rang and Dan answered it. When he rejoined Lanny he was smiling broadly. "You're a bun mopper-up," he accused. "That was Flynn, one of the detective sergeants on watch at your house. He found two drops of blood you overlooked, so he thinks you and Nance are in the house but refuse to answer the bell, and he wants permission to break in, in the name of the law. He says he can slide the latch on your front door lock like nobody's business. I told him to wait another hour and then try it, but to be careful."

Lanny's independent and belligerent nature was instantly aroused. "If I couldn't give a snooper like that cards and spades, the four aces, big and little casino, and beat him to death on the sweeps, I'd kiss a cow," she declared. "Guess I'll go home and make those big boobs feel ashamed of themselves for disturbing a lady."

"Whatever you do, be nice to them," he warned earnestly. "If you get snooty with them, Lanny, they'll just waltz you down to central station and stow you away for the night—with the excuse that the chief wants to see you. And I've decided I don't know you. If I did I'd go home with you."

He escorted Lanny out to her car and with a flashlight examined it very carefully again for signs of blood. He found two dried splotches and wiped them away before permitting her to depart.

As Lanny entered the driveway and paused in front of her garage, there were no detectives in sight, although there might have been had she deemed it the part of wisdom to glance carefully about her. She unlocked the garage door, climbed back in her car, drove in, stopped the motor and switched off the lights. Then she got out, closed and locked the garage door and turned on an electric light switch on the doorpost to light her way upstairs to her kitchen.

Then she almost screamed. Two big fellows wearing soft hats were standing behind her car, gazing at her awfully. Instantly Lanny switched off the light, got her little pistol out of her bag and switched the light on again.

"Now what do you two handsome devils want?" she demanded.

Like automatons the pair threw back their lapels and disclosed their shields. "Cops or no cops," Lanny announced, "my garage is my castle, and you can't come into it uninvited without a search warrant."

The two detectives looked at each other and Lanny realized that they appreciated her very much indeed. "She's a lawyer," said one of them.

"Not a very good one, though," the other replied. "However, Pat, let her have her own way. A woman—the outrageous fellow bowed low—and particularly a young and beautiful woman—with a pistol—always makes me nervous. If you will be good enough to open your garage door, Miss Lanning, we will go out, come up your front stairs, ring the bell like gentlemen, and ask if we can't come in and have a little chat with you. Is that satisfactory?"

"Eminently so," Lanny was as polite as the speaker now. She felt for the bolt in back of her, slid it back and kicked the door open without taking her eyes or her pistol off the pair. They went out, closed both doors behind her and held them closed until she had shot the bolt home again. Then she went upstairs and let herself in just as her doorbell rang; so she switched on the lights, removed her hat and coat, went to the door and opened it. Instantly two large hands thrust two cards at her; whereupon she was aware that she was about to entertain Detective Sergeant P. Flynn and Detective Sergeant A. Angellotti.

"Good evening, gentlemen," Lanny hailed them cordially. "Come in and rest your big fat feet."

P. Flynn nodded wisely to A. Angellotti. "She resents us, Amadeo," said he.

"Oh, I hope not, Pat. Let us hope it is not us she resents but our honorable profession." The wretched bowed again. "Thank you, Miss Lanning." And both gentlemen entered.

Lanny led them down the hall to her tiny drawing room. Angellotti, like a hound, followed close behind her, but Flynn was in no hurry. He swept the runner in the hall with a flashlight first, then followed his partner into the drawing room, and sat down heavily on a divan.

"Is this to be a long interview?" Lanny asked cheerfully.

P. Flynn shook his head. "A minute or two."

"Then I'll not bother giving you anything to drink."

TYPE OF BED SHOULD BE CHANGED SAYS SCIENTIST

Every now and then you read about someone who has passed the age mark of three score and ten and boasts of the fact that he has slept in the same kind of bed all his life. "Quite remarkable," you may say, "but decidedly against his best interests from a health point of view."

According to the most recent findings of science, resulting from a study of sleep made by Doctor Donald Anderson Laird, director of the psychological laboratory of Colgate University, every person should change the kind of bed he is using at the ages of 8, 18 and 38.

"After one's first birthday," he advises, "one should sleep on no springs but the coil type. As the body build and weight change from decade to decade, changes may be necessary to secure a foundation which has the proper resiliency to take care of increased weight or altered distribution of weight."

"At ages of 8, 18 and 38 it is often wise to change the bed springs just as the size of the pillow needs to be changed between the ages of one to around to 15 or 16, the period when shoulder breadth makes marked changes."

"The mattress and springs together, of course, give the buoyant quality—or lack of it—to our sleeping pace. What we should do is to start with good coil springs and then find the mattress which gives the best sleeping comfort."

Doctor Laird gives the following tests in Science to discover the right combination: Do you sink down comfortably, and without a sag at the hips when you lie on your back?

When on your side, does the shoulder settle in comfortably, without pressure?

Can you place the downward arm almost anywhere with comfort?

Does your hip sink down without your back sagging downward or being thrown upward?

Man spends one-third of his life in bed, a fact that makes this article of furniture of supreme importance.

"What we do and what we are during the other two-thirds," says Doctor Laird, "depend to a large extent on how well this sleeping third is invested. Personal health as well as physical ill health is readily affected by a poor quality of sleep. There is more to sleep than just going to bed for a stated number of hours; what we get out of sleep depends on how we sleep and how long.

 And now comes "Thanks a Million," with Dick Powell, Paul White-man and his band—and a dozen other top-notch stars—to the Kendrick Theatre this Friday and Saturday nights. You'll see a million dollars' worth of stars—Hollywood stars, of course.
 Crammed with entertainment and song this new 20th century spectacular fun-music film will captivate all lovers of good music and singing.
 It has a frivolous plot, woven about the wildcat adventures of a troupe making one-night stops, under the masterful guidance of comedian Dick Powell. In some manner the troupe becomes entangled with a bunch of wild-eyed politicians, and before they have extricated themselves, plenty has happened.
 There will also be the regular other entertaining features during the evening.

 "There has been considerable interest developed on the Rural Electrification program that has been made available through the federal government.
 The general plan provides for rural residents to form a non-profit association which can borrow money from the government to construct their own power lines. The association contracts for power and then retails it to their individual members as consumers. The retail price pays for maintenance, amortization on loan, etc.
 Further details of this program will be explained at the following meetings:
 Deary: Tuesday, Nov. 10, 2 p. m., Legion hall.
 Kendrick: Saturday, Nov. 14, 2 p. m., City hall.

HEAVY INTERNAL REVENUE TAXES MAY BE EXPECTED
 If history repeats itself heavier miscellaneous internal revenue taxes may be expected to carry the principal burden of balancing the federal budget, according to a study of federal taxation policies and their effect on business from 1870 to the present by Dr. Erwin Graue, professor of economics in the University of Idaho school of business administration. Dr. Graue's research, bearing the title "Taxes: Their Relation to the Business Cycle", appears in the November issue of Tax Magazine, a national monthly devoted to legal and economic aspects of federal and state taxation.
 The major objectives of Dr. Graue's study were to review the action of the federal government whenever confronted with a treasury deficit and to discover a course of action which the government may be expected to take in case it "gets down to business and attempts to balance the budget in the course of the next four years." Through charts and tables, Dr. Graue portrays the effects of emergency taxation measures on business.
 One point revealed by the study is the persistency with which miscellaneous internal revenue taxes have hung on as a source of government income following the termination of each war period. Another is that periods of federal treasury surplus correlate with periods of active business and periods of treasury deficit with relatively inactive business.
 Although there are numerous objections to heavier internal revenue taxes, Dr. Graue cites history to prove that "they will produce income."
 "If steep enough, they will bring home to the people extravagant public spending," he continues. "These internal revenue taxes will further cause people to share in relative economic responsibility along lines of political democracy."

We do the rest—even to steam-sterilizing your can, ready for use again. Try us.
Use "Pride O'The Potlatch" creamery butter. You'll like it.
