WHEAT MARKETS ADVANCE - EUROPEAN MARKET SLOW

United States grain markets were dominated by local conditions during the week ended October 21, states the Weekly Grain Market Review of the Bureau of Agricultural Eco-nomics. Wheat advanced despite weakness in European markets influenced by government purchases, continued dryness in the winter wheat belt and further improvements in business conditions. Oats and barley remained weak with current offerings in slow demand.

Continued weakness featured the general wheat situation as a result of heavy European offerings at rel-atively low prices and continued favorable prospects for the new Argentine crop Earther deterioration in the Australian crop, however, offset in part the favorable prospects in Argentina. The Liverpool market declined as a result of relatively cheap offerings of Danublan and French wheat and a slow demand from European millers. At the close of the week Danubian wheat sold on sample at Liverpool at 52c per bushel. French shippers were els of wheat to the United Kingdom and negotiations are in progress for the sale of about five million bushels to Italy on a barter basis. Belgian millers are required to use 35 per cent of native wheat in milling after November 1, and 40 per cent after December 1. Stocks on ocean passage remained fairly large at bells were tied to the candles with nearly 30 million bushels, but current shipments were small, totaling about 1,600,000 bushels from the southern hemisphere and 1,976,000 bushels from Black Sea ports including 1,280,000 bushels of Russian wheat. At the close of the week, United States No. 2 hard yellow winter was quoted at Liverpool at 65c per bushel, white wheat from the Pacific Coast at 71c and No. 3 Canadian Manitoba northern at 75c and Australian wheat at 76c per

Domestic cash wheat markets made further slight gains but milling inquiry was rather, slow and reductions in premiums in some instances were nearly equal to the advance in the basis futures. Cash hard wheat was %c lower to 1%c higher at Kansas City, with weakness in the premium basis relative to the December option partly off: set by the advance in the futures market. Receipts totaled 837 cars at Kansas City and 2,366 cars at nine winter wheat markets as compared with 2,569 cars a week ago and 1,501 a year ago. At the close of the week No. 2 hard winter was quoted at Kansas City at 64%c to 67%c per bushel. No. 4 dark hard sold at 64c to 68c. Soft red winter was 1c. higher for the week with demand fair to poor. No. 2 red was nominally quoted at 64c to 66c. In the spring wheat markets at Minneapolis prices held about unchanged, but a firmer tone was in evidence. Receipts slacked and mill demand was consistent. The Minneapolis arrivals of all classes totaled 849 cars while Duluth unloaded 1,112 cars. Cash wheat markets in the Pacific Northwest advanced 1c to 11/2c per bushel during the week, mostly following the advance in futures since demand did not show any appreciable increase. Mill demand was only moderate and confined mostly to special lots for immediate needs flour business was reported light. Export demand was also slow with no new export sales reported during the week. Government buying at loan values constituted the principal market activity in this area. Flour sales to the Philippines under the indemnity plan totaled 2,587 barrels with sales under the general indemnity at 5,234 barrels, and to China 32,050 barrels for the week. Wheat receipts at Puget Sound and Columbia river terminals totaled 768 cars for the week. Cash wheat prices at Portland October 21 were: Soft white, 66c, western red, 65c, hard red winter 63%c and hard white (baart) 66c per bushel. At Seattle western white was quoted at 63 1/2c, western red and hard winter at 61c, hard white (baart) 65c. Pacific Northwest barley markets developed further strength during the week. Market strength on feed barley was due mostly to continued good demand from Willamette valley areas where feed grain crops were short this year and insufficient for local needs. Ten carlots of barley were received at Portland during the week, mostly feed quality, going to local and nearby mixers. No. 1 bright western barley, weighing 45 pounds, was quoted at Portland Oct. 20 at $1.05 per 100, sacked basis.

Pacific Northwestern oats markets were somewhat firmer. Demand from the Willamette valley area for feeding oats resulted in continued steady movement from eastern Washington into that area to supplement local supplies. No. 2 white oats weighing 38 pounds were quoted at Portland, Oct. 20, at $1.30 per 100, sacked basis. No. • 2 gray oats remained nominal. Receipts of 25 cars of oats at Portland during the week reflected the fair trading and movement.

MOST AUTO FATALITIES CAUSED BY CARELESSNESS

"Why highway deaths?"
It is because drivers do not operate their cars according to the conchanging conditions with which they are confronted. This is only one of the many answers that may be given to this ever perplexing problem. That the improvement of the highways is not in keeping with the building of the faster cars may be another answer, but the study of some of the contributing factors for the traffic accidents and fatalities upon the Idaho highways can be summarized in a few cases, according to those that were pre-sented by state patrolmen and other enforcement officers who attended the first session of the second Idaho Police Academy which was recently concluded in Boise this week.

At the request of J. L. Balderston, commissioner of law enforcement, fficers submitted the five outstanding causes of accidents in their district. The following is the summary of the views of 19 officers: Inattentiveness of driver, 18; drivers under the influence of intoxicating liquor, 17; failure to observe traffic laws and signs, 14; excessive speed, 13; reckless driving, 11; defective equipment, 7; lack of courtesy, 6; livestock on highways, 2; and in-adequate policing, incompetency, and pedestrians, one each.

In connection with the officers' views upon the principal causes of the accidents in their districts, the patrolmen for September, announced by the Commissioner, shows that out of 175 arrests, the three princi-pal charges were: Reckless driving, 31; speeders, 30; and driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor, 20. In these cases, the arrests were followed by revocation or suspension of drivers' licenses.

Among the other arrests made by the traffic officers were 25 for driving with no operator's license, 16 with improper license, 13 for running stop signs, 11 for improper lights or failing to dim headlights, and 24 for miscellaneous causes. In addition to the arrests, the officers issued 1438 warnings for violations of the motor vehicle laws. There were 18,146 warnings that were not otherwise reported. During September the officers traveled 94,710 miles, spent 7,279 hours on day duty, and 4,218 hours on night duty. They spent 641 hours in assisting other officers or on duties other than traffic.

Disasters Strike 41 States During Year

Red Cross Aids 420,000 Persons Following Catastrophes

That the past year has not been an easy one for the American Red Cross is shown in a recent report listing disasters necessitating Red Cross relief throughout the United States during the past twelve months.

The report reveals that 129 domestic disasters called for Red Cross aid in 247 counties of 41 states, and that assistance was given to 420,000 persons who were disaster victims.

"That this has been a very active year is obvious when one compares this year's operations with the average of 92 disasters requiring Red Cross aid annually for the past 15 years," Chairman Norman H. Davis said in commenting on the Red Cross Disaster Relief Service report.

These catastrophes included cloudbursts, cyclones, epidemics, fires, floods, forest fires, hailstorms, mine explosions, a school bus accident, a shipwreck, tornadoes, typhoons, and wind storms.

"Disaster relief was the first humanitarian work of the American Red Cross after its organization in 1881." Mr. Davis said. "In the ensuing 57 years the flag of the Red Cross has flown upon every scene of major disaster in the United States. The Red Cross has carried relief-food, clothing, shelter. medical aid, rehabilitation of homes and families—to more than 2,200 scenes of disaster at home and abroad, and has expended over $140,000,000 contributed by the American public in this work of mercy."

The Red Cross policies of relief, the national chairman pointed out, have been established over a period of years through actual experience of its workers in the field. Relief is given on the basis or need of sufferers-not of losses. Loans, he pointed out, are never made, but relief is a gift from the Red Cross in the name of its members and contributors to its work.

"It would not be possible for the Red Cross to carry out such widespread relief activities without the help of thousands of volunteer workers." Mr Davis said. "Volunteers are the main" stay of the organization, and in the past year's work assistance from many cooperating agencies has made it pos sible for us to answer the many calls for help."

While relief was being given to victims of natural catastrophes, the Red Cross was not unmindful of the necessity for preparedness plans to meet emergencies that may arise in any American community. Red Cross chap ters in hundreds of counties have or ganized disaster preparedness committees charged with responsibility .o map relief plans in advance of need. and to organize resources of communi ties to prevent duplication of effort and waste of materials when calls for help are received.

These plans are proving especially advantageous in localities subject to frequent floods, tornadoes, or hurricanes, and actual tests of such planning have demonstrated the necessity for such measures.

"The administration of such relief for disaster victims is made possible by annual memberships of millions of Americans in all walks of life," Mr. Davis pointed out. "The extent of Red Cross aid to such sufferers is entirely dependent upon unselfish sharing on the part of all of us."

Red Cross Nurses Aid Million Sick

Red Cross public health nurses made more than one million visits to or on behalf of the sick during the fiscal year

The patients live in mountain communities, on islands off the coast, in isolated swamp regions, and in crowded industrial sections. During the same period the nurses inspected 559,187 school children for health defects in cooperation with local physicians, and gave instructions in home hygiene and care of the sick to 58,754 mothers and young girls.

Red Cross Volunteers Assist War Veterans

Red Cross workers in chapters, in hospitals and on posts of the Army. Navy, Coast Guard, and Marine Corps, assisted 122,355 active service men or veterans or their families during the past 12 months.

Red Cross service to these men in cluded such personal help as letterwriting, shopping and recreational leadership, but it also included financial assistance to their dependents, help in locating missing members of their families, and assistance in filing necessary applications for pensions, disability pay, hospitalization, or for discharge from active service because of home needs.

The average number of men assisted by Red Cross workers each month was 18,790, according to a recent report.

Fear of Spirits

In certain parts of India, if one or two male children die early in life, the nose of the next-born boy is pierced and a nose-ring put into it so that the evil spirits, mistaking the baby for a girl, will pass over it and do the boy no harm.

CAN NOW MAKE HAY IN RAINY WEATHER

Modern Methods Are Used In Making Green Silage.

By Clarence H. Parsons, Superintendent Massachusetts State College Farm. WNU Service.

How to make hay in rainy weather is a trick that has been solved on many dairy farms during the past few years. Modern methods of making green grass silage have done away with the need for long curing in the field, and the resulting product is high in valuable food elements and appetizing to the cows.

Dairymen have been experimenting with this new method of making grass and clover silage for several years and the state college has also given it extensive trials. Up to the present time, corn has been the standard silage crop of the Northeast, but on many farms grass and clover are easier to grow, the yields are as high as those of silage corn, and protein content of the resulting silage is higher than that of corn silage.

Grasses and clover are low in sugar content and for this reason it was difficult to bring about desirable fermentation in the silo until investigators found that the addition of cheap molasses brought about this result. The molasses is added to the grass and clover as it is fed into the cutter. On the college farm 40 to 60 pounds of molasses are added to each ton of grass. Where alfalfa is put up about 75 pounds of molasses to the ton is used. Silage put up in this manner last year came out of the silo sweet and in excellent condition, and the herd responded favorably

Grass silage is best when the crop is cut in a young and tender stage. If it becomes mature and woody, it makes poor silage.

Feed Hoppers Are Urged For the Young Pullets

Healthy growing pullets require large quantities of feed, and the best growth can be made only when the birds have free and continued access to the feed. For this reason, advises a writer in the Montreal Herald, we recommend at least three 5-foot mash hoppers 4 to 5 inches deep, feeding from both sides, for each 100 birds, during the early part of the summer. These hoppers should be filled daily with fresh mash, and should never stand empty. On the other hand, if they are filled too full there may be a waste of mash. To overcome this difficulty a strip of lath may be nailed along the top of the outer edge, so as to form a lip and prevent spillvolving pole or reel of laths is fastened just above the level of the feed and secured to the raised ends of the hopper. For outdoor feeding, much labor can be saved by using large weatherproof, self-feeding hoppers. These are built with a solid roof or lid covered with tarpaper, which extends out beyond the feed trough on each side of the reservoir, and thus protects it from rain. These feeders may hold 100 to 200 pounds of mash, and thus require little attention in filling. A pullet will eat about 20 to 25 pounds of feed from the age of six weeks up to maturity.

To prevent soiling the feed, a re-

Gasoline, Kerosene Dangers Gasoline and kerosene fires cause a loss of approximately $6,000,000 a year on the farms of the United States, according to the bureau of chemistry and soils of the United States Department of Agriculture. They are sixth among the causes of farm fires and are responsible for 5 to 7 per cent of the total loss each year. Ignorance and disregard of the explosion hazard of gasoline and kerosene are responsible for most of these fires, says a bulletin. The vapor of gasoline is so highly explosive that it has been called "liquid dynamite." It is dangerous to use gasoline for dry cleaning in the 'home. It may explode from even a tiny spark of static electricity produced by rubbing the clothing being cleaned. Although not so inflammable as gasoline, kerosene also gives off vapors which may be easily ignited. Neither should be used to start a fire in the house.

Farm and Feed Lot

Matured sugar cane contains 18 per cent sugar.

In hot weather the hens need plenty of water, often renewed.

Soils become acid because the lime is used by crops and carried away in drainage water.

Legume hay and legume pasture are fine for growing colts. These nutritious roughages make it unnecessary to feed grain to colts.

Legume hay as part of the roughage helps to keep horses in good health and flesh, says E. T. Robbins, live stock extension specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

YOUNG BIRDS NEED GROWING QUARTERS

Ample Space for Pullets Is Best Summer Plan.

By Dr. W. C. Thompson, Poultry Husband man, Rutgers University.—WNU Service. Much of the success of next year's table-egg producing flock depends upon the way in which the young pullets are being grown this summer. Future layers must be protected against adverse conditions during the warm summer months.

A much too common fault among poultrymen is to crowd the pullets. Constant and too close contacts tend to injure the health of developing pullets and increase the risks of

It is recommended that pullets be divided into colonies or flocks for handling on summer ranges or field. Sixty pullets make a desirable unit and is the number which can be taken care of economically and efficiently in one standardized collapsible summer shelter. These shelters are light in weight and can be easily moved from place to place over the range. This means that each colony of pullets can be given not only ample space or area over which to roam, but also fresh, clean ground throughout the season.

Each colony should be handled as a separate unit and supplied with its own water troughs or fountains and its own mash and grain hoppers. Five such units can be efficiently managed on each acre of range, particularly if the range is covered with some green, growing crop, such as grass or alfalfa. In this way, each acre of range will accommodate 300 grown pullets to advantage. Such an arrangement will obviate overcrowding and minimize disease problems.

If may seem, during the early summer season, that the shelters could easily accommodate more than 60 pullets, but as the weeks advance the fast growing pullets will soon use the available space and prove the wisdom of having allowed that amount.

Dip for Sheep Scab Is

Cure for the Disease Sheep scab, a parasitic disease of the skin caused by finy mites, can be cleared up by dipping the animals in a solution of lime and sulphur, coal tar disinfectant or 40 per cent nicotine sulphate. The solution should be made up at the rate recommended on the dip container, advises Wallaces' Farmer. For best results, the dip should be about 105 to 110 degrees in temperature. Keep each animal in the dipping vat for two full minutes. Keep badly infested sheep in for three minutes.

Follow with a second dipping 10 to 12 days later. Failure to make a this interval means a possible reinfestation with a new broad of

Along with treatment of the live animals, clean up and disinfect the sheds. Keep the dipped sheep out of these sheds for at least 30 days. In fact, following dipping, it is advisable to turn the sheep onto ground where they have not been running for a period of at least several

Grain Feed for Chicks

Chicks should be given grain feed after the first eight or ten days. This should be fed two or three times a day in the mash hoppers and on top of the mash. This lessens the chance of the chick picking up droppings. It is very essential that sufficient hopper space be supplied so that all the birds can eat at one time. Where it is necessary to keep the chicks in the brooder house, the ration should be supplemented with one per cent of biologically tested cod liver oil. However, if the birds have access to a range and direct sunlight this supplement is unnecessary.

Exercise for Cows

Dairy cows should have exercise. but not an excessive amount, says C. W. Turner, of the Missouri station. In all but two out of twentytwo comparative tests, there was an increase in the percentage of butterfat when cows were changed from rest to exercise of three miles daily. A decrease was noted when they were shifted from exercise to rest. In further experiments, it was observed that during a period of exereise the feed consumption was increased, milk production maintained and percentage of fat increased over a corresponding period of rest.

White Plymouth Rock

The White Plymouth Rock is the second most popular variety of this breed, according to a writer in the Wisconsin Agriculturist. All the characteristics of the White Plymouth Rock are supposed to be identical with those of the Barred Plymouth Rock except color. As a matter of fact the White Plymouth Rock tends to run somewhat larger in size, and the type is a little more uniform and a little better than that of the Barred Plymouth Rock.

Salt Superstitions Are Numerous in Other Lands

There are almost as many salt superstitions and legends as there are stories of bread, and it is interesting to look back over them, notes a writer in the Montreal

It is a common thing to say that a person is not worth his salt and that it is bad luck to spill salt, but where did these ideas originate? In India, people do gather the sea water and from it evaporate their own salt, and by their ability to prepare the salt their value as salt workers is determined. Our counterpart of this expression is, "He isn't worth his keep.

The spilling superstition may have come to us from the Arabs or from the Hebrews, although they hold somewhat divergent views as to what causes the bad luck. In the Hebraic language, "salty" synonymous with "barren," and in the ancient biblical times it was customary to spill salt over the site of a destroyed city because it would render the ground barren and the city, therefore, unfit for rebuilding. Consequently, the idea developed that to spill salt was bad and from that has come the modern superstition.

On the other hand, among the Far Eastern nations salt is recognized as an emblem of friendship and so it is easy to understand how the spilling of salt would be construed as an unfriendly gesture and would lead to the superstition that such an accident would foretell a quarrel.

Sandy Hook Once Island.

According to Old Record The log of the Half Moon, kept by Alfred Juet, the mate, in describing Henry Hudson's discovery of what is now the coast of New Jersey, states, under date of September 8, 1609, that the explorers came to "three rivers." Historians have been guessing ever since just which waterways Juet referred to.

Writers of the American Guide have found two editions of a map of New Jersey in the library of Rutgers university. The maps were published by William Fadden, of Charing Cross, London, England, in December, 1777, and in December, 1778, from a survey made by Bernard Ratzer, while he was a lieu-tenant in the king's army.

The earlier maps show Sandy Hook as a peninsula, the second map shows it as an island. The publisher placed a legend in the water separating the Hook from the mainland, which explains that "the sea broke through in September, 1778." The sea, doubtlessly, was flowing through the channel in 1609, when Hudson arrived. This branch of the sea was probably mistaken for a river by the explorers.

Chief Town of Dalmatia

Split, the center of the Yugoslav Riviera, is the chief town of Dalmatia. In the Third century Emperor Diocletian repaired to the site — then the little village of Aspalatos - to "plant cabbages"; but instead he built for himself an immense palace. This palace, occupyfollow-up dip at exactly the end of | ing some ten acres, stands, forming a town in itself with several hundred families. In the Seventh century the emperor's mausoleum became a Dom, or cathedral, and his Temple of Jupiter is a baptistry. No building in the world, perhaps, boasts as great a mixture of architectural styles as this cathedral. There are examples of the antique. the Roman, the early Asiatic, the early Gothic, the Renaissance and other arts, all accumulated as the building underwent changes and repairs in the course of sixteen centuries.

Pygmy Hippopotamus

The pygmy hippopotamus is found only in a few lakes and rivers of Liberia, the Negro republic of Western Africa, although his ancestors in prehistoric times inhabited southern Europe, northern Africa, and the islands of the Mediterranean. The pygmy is not so well equipped for swimming as the giant hippo'. His eyes are set in the side of his head, instead of on top, and his legs and tail are longer. He has a larger brain and spends more of his time on shore in dense jungle than in the water.

Heidelberg

Heidelberg, a university town of Baden in southwestern Germany, is the seat of the university, which was founded in 1385. The town has an ancient castle which contains in its cellar a cask with a capacity of 46,732 gallons. Near Heidelberg, in 1907, the lower jawbone of a prehistoric man was found, and this city has given its name to the racial type which is believed to have existed many hundreds of thousands of years ago.

Strange Animal Alliance One of the strangest alliances of the animal kingdom is that of the rattlesnake, the prairie dog and the owl on the western plains. The prairie dog is an involuntary host to the two intruders who move into his underground home. PWA AND WPA ADMINIS-TRATIONS DEFINED

The Public Works Administration does exactly what its name suggests—it constructs useful public works. While the Works Progress Administration also builds schools, municipal structures and highways, there is this essential difference: All Public Works projects are built by contract. Workmen employed on PWA projects are hired by the contractor and are paid according to wage rates prevailing in the locality. The Public Works Administration deals with contractors engaged to construct permanent public

The Works Progress Administra-tion, on the other hand, deals with workers on relief. It provides employment for laborers who are registered on WPA relief rolls and who are paid "relief" wages.

Under terms of an agreement be-tween Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes and Works Progress Administrator Harry Hopkins, applications for small projects where hand labor is required and relief labor is available are referred to the Works Progress Administration, and large construction projects requiring skilled labor are handled by the Public Works Administration.

Fleeing a tornado near Clyde, Texas, pa automobile tossed a quarter-mile away. Hours later a telephone lineman heard a child's whimper in a roadside ditch. There he found 3-year-old Jesse Donald Rutledge, water up to his chin, holding his 3-months-old brother Daryl's head above water. Relatives being unable to care for the orphans, Red Cross workers arranged a maintenance fund to support them until they are 16.
