Stars In New Comedy
There are a lot of stars and there promises to be a lot of laughs and songs in the new picture opening at the Kendrick Theatre this Friday and Saturday nights, "Man About Town."
This new film co-stars Jack Benny, Dorothy Lamour and Edward Arnold, with Jack Benny, the master laugh getter of the air lanes leading the pack. There are lots of pretty girls, dancing and three new songs that are already in the "hit" class.
Among the added attractions are the sensational dancing of "Rochester," the gravel-throated valet of Jack Benny — said to be guaranteed to produce laughter from any audience. It is a show said to be well worth anyone's seeing.
In addition there will be another episode of "The Lone Ranger" and other shorts.

STORY OF THE MOOSE

King of North American game is the moose. The domain of this giant deer stretches across the northland from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The origin of the moose is clouded in obscurity. Archaeologists believe his original ancestor roamed in Asia. Just when the descendants crossed the Bering Straits into America has not been ascertained.

Scientific research has shown the moose to be a member of the deer or elk family. Early settlers along the Atlantic seaboard saw two kinds of deer. The smaller, now known as the Virginia or white-tail deer, they called "deer." The larger, the wapiti, they misnamed "elk," for the only large deer with which they were familiar was the European elk. Thus, when the true American elk was encountered, its name had already been appropriated, so this strange animal was given the Indian name of "moose" which means, "he strips or eats off," referring to the fact that he lives off the bark and twigs of trees.

Thus we readily see that the moose, though an Oriental, has transferred his habitat to the Occident, where now, unless drastic steps are taken, he faces extinction. In truth these northern woods bid fair to be his last "round-up."

That the mainstay of existence for many Indians and early settlers was the moose, is indicated in documents left by early explorers. They told of making the hide into leather for clothing, tents, shoes and canoes. The hide often became the medium of exchange and barter instead of money.

With the coming of the white man, the moose became a valuable article of commerce and played an important part in the economic development of the new country. However, the heedless slaughter of the great herds caused them gradually to retreat north and westward. Hides and antlers of the moose were in great demand in Europe, the hides for leather, and the horns to be converted into handles for knives or other instruments.

A vivid contrast may be drawn between those early days in the new country when the moose provided the actual needs of man, and today when the great animal is protected by law and is permitted to roam in the wilds of the northwest to provide game in specified seasons for eager sportsmen. His meat, venison, is considered a delicacy. However, the hide of the moose, when tanned, is now considered an inferior leather.

The moose is the most colossal of the deer family, although he has little claim to beauty. When grown, he stands six feet or more at the withers. The average bull moose weighs around one thousand pounds. His legs are long, but his body is short, low in the quarters and high in the shoulders. He has a large head, long ears, and short neck. The end of his muzzle overhangs the end of the chin by several inches. In browsing, it is of great use in conveying food into the mouth. A distinguishing feature of the moose is the "bell," a hanging growth of skin and hair from ten to fifteen inches in length, suspended from the under side of the throat. The purpose of the bell is unknown. The hair of a moose is quite coarse, varying from about three inches in length over the body to six inches on the neck and shoulders. It ranges in color through brown, grayish brown and brownish black.

The moose is a ruminant. Most wild animals feed ordinarily at night and seek cover during the day. The stalwart moose utilizes both periods for grazing and employs both the hours of darkness as well as day, at his pleasure, for seeking food and rest. He sustains himself with a varied diet including twigs, leaves and bark, supplemented by moss and lichen. In warm weather he dines upon pads of lilies and other water plants. He is at home in lakes and bays, which often becomes his refuge from insect pests in summer. He swims well, but not rapidly, with head and shoulders well above water.

The moose may lack the regal dignity of the American elk and the grace of the white-tailed deer, but his intelligence is superior to both. Elk and deer, at the sound of a shot, take refuge in blind, headlong flight. But the moose will pause a few seconds, not through stupidity as some hunters have believed, but to give time for his senses to furnish him with a particular course of conduct. Like most wild animals, the moose's sense of sight is uncertain, but his sense of smell and hearing offset this deficiency.

Attacks on men by a moose have rarely been reported. They are dangerous, however, when badly wounded, or in the mating season, during which the animals lose their natural timidity. Bull moose fight each other with their antlers, but such combats ordinarily take place only during the mating season, generally when two bulls are vying for the favor of a cow moose. In fights with other animals, the moose uses his hoofs. Wolves, cougars and bears are the moose's most formidable enemies. The moose is easily tamed, but like all deer, he is more dangerous when domesticated than when wild, for his fear of man, which is man's greatest safeguard in the woods is lost. The moose has rarely been bred in captivity.

One would assume that since the north country has been for centuries the homeland of this giant beast, he would be particularly adapted to the climate. However, he is at greatest disadvantage when deep snow has become encrusted, for it hampers his movements and leaves him comparatively helpless in the presence of his enemies. In a more kindly vein, the moose, unlike many other animals where the instinct of the survival of the fittest predominates, seeks to protect his ilk from the rigors of winter. With the cold arctic blasts, the moose starts to "yard" the particular group he controls. By "yarding" is meant that he gathers his herd, scattered during more seasonable weather, into a compact group. A herd usually consists of from five to a dozen young bulls, cows and calves. It is his natural instinct to provide protection for the weaker animals.

The yarding place is formed in a clearing where food is plentiful, and a network of paths is formed which admits considerable movement. When the feed in a yard is exhausted, the group moves on to a new yarding place. In other seasons, and when the snow is not deep, the animals roam freely.

In the autumn, with his antlers full grown, the bull moose goes in search of his mate. The following spring, the cow moose drops her calf. Moose families as a whole are small in size. Rarely does a cow ever rear more than three calves. Like every other animal of the forest and many of the domesticated kinds, the moose season and is indeed a "bad customer" to encounter. During this period, the moose has most of his battles with his own kind. This is especially true when bucks are wooing the same cow. In such an event it is usually a question of the survival of the fittest. Many hunters, familiar with the north country, bear witness to the fact that many times the battle wages so severely that neither survive the encounter. Instances have also been related where the moose have become enmeshed in each other's antlers and, being unable to free themselves, have slowly died of starvation.

Antlers are common to the bull moose and on rare occasions have been reported found on a cow moose. These antlers have the physical as well as chemical properties of true bone. Beginning about April, their growth is slow at first, but increases rapidly as summer advances. While they are developing, the antlers are covered by a thin layer of skin, known as "velvet," the bulls assist in this process by scraping their horns against trees. Each succeeding year the bull moose drops his antlers earlier.

The bull moose reaches his prime at about seven years. At four years, the antlers assume the adult form, in a small size. From then on, each year the antlers assume the increase in size and number of points, until the bull reaches his prime. In succeeding years his horns become dwarfed and imperfect with age.

The finest specimens of moose antlers come from the Menai Peninsula in Alaska. The widest spread of antlers yet secured and recorded came from there. Today they are in the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago. These antlers have a spread of 78½ inches and a total of 34 prongs.

Although the goal is ever the same, there are varying opinions on the most desirable method of hunting moose. Many hunters believe still hunting or stalking, is the most sportsmanlike procedure; then, man at his best pitted against moose at his best. Successful still-hunting involves following the trail of a moose watching for footprints and freshly nibbled twigs and bark that indicate he has dined near recently.

Others are staunch advocates of the hunting method known as "calling." They believe there is no greater sport than getting the bull moose to answer their call. These hunters seek to attract a bull moose by imitating with a horn of birch bark, the cry of a cow-moose calling for a mate. In a few localities it is usual for hunters to "speak bull," the caller pretending to challenge his victim to combat with one of his own sex. The chief disadvantage of either form of calling is that it is possible only during the rutting season. Some hunters insist the bull is never fooled by the call made on a horn. Driving, dogging and walking-down a moose are less popular methods of moose hunting.

During the last century and a half every effort has been made by both the United States and Canadian Governments to provide adequate protection for the moose. The game laws relating to this great animal have become increasingly stringent, and this is as it should be—otherwise 'tis certain that, like the buffalo, the King of the Forest would be doomed to extinction.

Tire Prices Down

Substantial reductions in consumer list prices on tires and tubes were announced November 1 by P. W. Litchfield, president of The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. The new prices were effective November 1st.

"In view of the current upward trend of all prices, including crude rubber, this announcement will come as a surprise," said Mr. Litchfield. "However, we have placed ourselves in position to make these reductions for tire users by an extensive program of plant modernization and by streamlining our system of distribution. We believe this principle of immediately passing a legitimate share of such savings along to the public to be consistent with enlightened economic policy and indispensable to the continuance of national recovery."

The reduction of 12.5% on the price of the G-100 line in the popular 600x16 passenger car size is typical of our new list. This brings the consumer price on this size down from $15.95 to $13.95. The Life-Guard in the same size is reduced 12 per cent and the standard heavy duty tube is reduced 6.8 per cent.

The company's factories at Akron and Jackson, Michigan; Los Angeles, Calif., and Gadsden, Ala., have been thoroughly modernized during the past year so that manufacturing costs might be reduced. Eight bulk plants have been established at strategic points throughout the United States in bringing about a more simplified system of wholesale distribution. The entire program has involved several millions of dollars in capital outlay.

Goodyear sales executives predict that the new price levels will tend to stabilize the tire market to a degree not known during the past year.

Fictitious list prices, from which long discounts have been offered, have been regarded as a major evil in the tire industry over a considerable period. With wholesale prices reduced and dealer discounts readjusted, the new price arrangement is expected by Goodyear executives to correct this evil and re-establish consumer lists on a valid basis.

It is said that the munitions experts over in Europe are making bombs out of liquor bottles. A lot of bums have been made out of 'em in the United States.

In 1938 it was estimated that the number of people playing golf regularly in the U. S. increased 25 per cent.

Cotton plants have been known to send their root systems to a depth of six or eight feet.

Romeo a Forgotten Man in Home Town

Final Resting Place Not Known in Verona.

VERONA, ITALY.—Romeo Montecchi, suitor of the famed Juliet, is a forgotten man in his home town of Verona.

Although according to Shakespeare's tragedy the immortal lovers died together rather than be separated, no evidence is to be found here of the final resting place of history's foremost lover.

Juliet's tomb instead is placed on the banks of the river Po and is the object of visits of newlyweds.

Even the home where Juliet was born with the famous balcony under which Romeo pined with love is the scene of lovers' pilgrimages. The home is identified by a metal tablet on the outside wall indicating that it is the "palace" of the Capulets, Juliet's parents.

Romeo's home, which still stands in a small nearby street, likewise is forgotten and abandoned. The coat of arms of the proud Montecchi family now surrounds a blacksmith's shop.

Although tradition says that Romeo was buried with his beloved Juliet, the marble indication on the latter's tomb has no reference to Romeo.

Juliet's tomb is placed in a crypt of a small chapel erected, together with a cloister, during the last century after the stone coffin had been chipped two inches by souvenir hunters. It stands alongside an old Franciscan convent built in 1230 which, according to numerous authorities, is actually that of the celebrated Friar Lorenzo da Reggelo, Shakespeare's "Friar Lawrence," who blessed the secret marriage of the two unhappy lovers.

The cloister is bordered with chestnut trees and cypresses and gay with bright flowers, fountains and old stone seats. In the center of the shady cloister stands a bust of the poet of Stratford on Avon, on a slender column, sole guardian of the tomb of "True and Faithful Juliet."

Romeo is even forgotten in the "fan mail." Outside of Juliet's tomb there is a small letterbox labeled "Mail for Juliet." According to tradition, Italian lovers believe that visitors who drop a message in the box will be lucky in love. According to the old custodian of the tomb, Ettore Bellina, Romeo has never received a line.

Magnesium in Great Demand

Available Supply Short of Present Requirements of Industry.

WASHINGTON.—Increasing demand for magnesium, competitor of aluminum, is now reported to be in excess of the available supply, and plant extensions are predicted. The present capacity in the United States is about 3,000 short tons.

"A cubic foot of aluminum is one-third the weight of a cubic foot of structural steel, but a cubic foot of magnesium weighs only two-thirds as much as aluminum," says the National Geographic society.

"Magnesium costs 40 per cent more per pound than aluminum, but because of its lighter weight, the cubic foot of magnesium would cost slightly less than the cubic foot of aluminum."

"One-twelfth of the earth's crust is aluminum, but magnesium can be obtained from sea water which covers twice the land areas. All domestic magnesium today comes from Michigan brine wells, but magnesium compounds are being produced in the United States today from sea water."

"Magnesium possesses many of the qualities which have made aluminum valuable to industry; it can be machined as are other metals; it can be hammered into shape, drawn into wire, or extruded into various forms."

Used in Airplanes.

"Because of its lightness, magnesium has been entering more and more into airplane construction, this industry consuming about 70 per cent of the magnesium castings produced. These are mostly alloys of magnesium and aluminum, the alloys being stronger than either metal separately. Extended use of magnesium can reduce the weight of an airplane almost 200 pounds."

"To armament and self-sufficiency programs are ascribed the increased world production of 18,000 tons, of which Germany produced 10,000 tons, according to estimates of the U. S. bureau of mines. It is today the lightest structural metal commercially available."

"Government scientists predict the greater use of magnesium in the manufacture of motor cars, buses, trucks and trailers, in line with the present trend toward the reduction of the weight of these products. Domestic resources, in their opinion, can supply an expanding demand without increase in price."

"Nowhere is magnesium found as a metal; it occurs only in its several compounds. The sulphate, epsom salts, was discovered in 1695, but the metal itself was not isolated from the known compounds until 1808, thus antedating aluminum by about 16 years. Commercial production did not begin in the United States until 1915."

"Because of its unusual qualities, magnesium is already being used in widely varied products; it is used in vacuum-sweepers and also in bread-slicing and bread-wrapping machinery; in reel magazines for motion picture cameras, pneumatic tools, and needle bars in the textile industries; in binoculars and in optical lens-grinding forms, in lightweight radio equipment—and in fireworks."

Compounds Important.

"Far more important from a tonnage standpoint than the metal itself are the compounds. These are used in making cement and stucco, in plaster-board and partition tiles, in insulating materials; also in fertilizers and in large quantities for furnace linings in the metals industries."

"The most common form is the carbonate, 'magnesite,' which is mined in many places. The only commercial sources in the United States are in California and Washington, which together yield 200,000 short tons a year, valued at $1,500,000."

"Russia is the largest producer of magnesite, but exports little. The principal exports have come from the Austrian region of Germany, and from China and Greece. The largest exports have gone to Japan. During the World war the price of magnesite jumped from $20 a ton to $50."

"In 1935, in the stratosphere flight of the National Geographic society-air army corps balloon, Explorer II, the observer and pilot, with a ton of scientific apparatus, were enclosed in a nine-foot spherical gondola. It was made of an alloy of more than 95 per cent pure magnesium, 4 per cent aluminum, and a small amount of manganese. The shell was only three-sixteenths of an inch thick. Every pound saved in weight, it was estimated, enabled the balloon to ascend an additional 15 feet."

Home Founding Fulfills Desire After 21 Years

SWARTHMORE, PA.—A 35-acre estate here is being turned into a home for 11 aged women—just as Miss Sally P. Gibbons, a Quaker spinster, provided in her will prior to her death 21 years ago.

The home never was established because trustees of Miss Gibbons' estate held it did not have sufficient income. A special master appraised the $500,000 estate and determined that the project could be carried out.

Qualifications for the 11 permanent guests are:

They must be past 40.
They must be dependent.
They must be Protestants.

To make them feel at home, the guests must tend their own rooms, although there will be a staff of three to operate the home.

Blind Typist Obtains Civil Service Position

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—Miss Thomsina Donofrio, 24, is the first blind person in the history of Syracuse to win a provisional appointment as a dictaphone typist. She was appointed by the state civil service commission to fill the position at the offices of the Onondaga county public welfare department.

Miss Donofrio said she hoped that the appointment would convince Syracuse employers that blind persons "are as competent at some types of work as people with normal vision."

Miss Donofrio, who has been blind 10 years, learned typing at the New York State School for the Blind at Batavia, N. Y.

According to recent researches, China was the first nation to make use of wall paper. Traces have been discovered of wall paper being used for ritual purposes more than 2,000 years ago.

THUMB NAIL RESUMES OF IDAHO HISTORY

By Glenn Balch

Wardner's Wit

Jim Wardner stood on the side of a hill looking at a mine that lived up to a prospector's wildest dreams. A broad ragged splash of rich galena ore on the very surface of the earth reflected the sun's glittering rays like a giant mirror. A man of wide mining experience, Jim Wardner knew he was looking at one of the biggest finds of the northwest.

It was the Coeur d'Alene country and the year was 1885. The Coeur d'Alenes were just beginning to blossom in all their mineralized glory. But Jim Wardner, looking at this remarkable outcropping of surface ore, was not particularly happy. He had not been a member of the discovery party.

The mine was eventually to be called the Bunker Hill & Sullivan and it had been discovered by Kellogg's jack, a little Spanish donkey which later enjoyed wide fame. The other members of the party were N. S. Kellogg, Con Sullivan and Phil O'Rourke. The jack had left the camp a few nights before and they had found it staring at the same sight which Jim Wardner saw.

Wardner, if he had been there three days earlier, could have taken his choice of all this wealth. Now it was gone, staked by the members of the discovering party. Wardner shook his head sadly. Opportunities like this came only once in a lifetime. Here he was—on the ground, but out.

In that day, however, fortunes hinged again and again on a thread, a quick thought or a right word. Many a gamble was made and most of the stakes were lost. And here was the richest find of the entire region. Wardner was determined to cut himself in if possible.

Presently leaving the discoverers busy staking their claims, Wardner ambled innocently down the slope. Soon he was out of sight among the trees. A short time later the discoverers heard him shout: "Come here, boys," he cried, his voice strong with triumph, "I've got something to show you."

They went down the slope, wondering what Wardner could have found. He took them to a big fir tree. The bark had been cut away on one side to present a smooth slab of wood. And there, in this new gash, they saw where, Wardner had made a full and complete location of all the water in the stream.

For a minute the men were dumfounded. They knew mining impossible without water. Only an instant was needed for them to realize the significance of what Wardner had done.

"All I need," Wardner said, is a witness."

There was another long second of silence, then Sullivan spoke. "We forgot all about water, Jim," he said. "You've got the drop on us." Then he stepped forward and signed his name to the location notice as a witness.

After sharing big as a partner in the mine, Wardner later sold his water rights for a cool $50,000.

WELL, FOLKS—Thanksgiving has come and gone (both of 'em) and here we are rolling along quite merrily toward the Christmas holidays — and with them comes the expenses we all ways have in entertaining Santa Claus—costs money, too.
Of course we all enjoy the season but we all feel we must do something to help out the old pocketbook — so here's a suggestion for you — sell your cream to us. We pay spot-cash. No waiting, no fuss, no bother — and we return a steam sterilized, sweet smelling ready to use can. No chemicals to bother about washing from the can before it can be used. Try us, try our service and our cash—you'll find it will spend just dandy. In fact, the more you spend of it the more you'll want to. So bring in that cream—cash in.

How times have changed. To say a man is happy as a king is down-right sarcasm.
Mistress (after giving orders for half an hour): "Now, are there any questions you would like to ask?"
Maid: "Yessum, can I use your phone to call the depot and tell them to keep my trunk there?"
"Oh, I say, my dear fellow, do you serve nuts on sundaes?"
"We serve anybody, Sundays, or weekdays. What'll yours be?"
If you phone the wife about staying down town to dinner you usually get the right number but the wrong answer.
Girl: "Do you pet?"
Shy Youth: "Only animals."
Girl: "Well, go ahead. I'll be the goat."

Dainty Pyrex OVENWARE

We have just unpacked and put on display a fine selection of the latest styles and kinds of Pyrex ovenware, such as:

BAKING DISHES (oblong and round) CUSTARD CUPS, PIE PLATES (all sizes) COVERED DISHES AND DISH ASSORTMENTS.

We have some of these items in our window — and suggest that you stop and see these dainty — but very serviceable kitchen items. They will delight the most fastidious housewife.

HUNTERS — ATTENTION!

Let us supply your ammunition needs for the Chink season. We have in stock all gauges and varieties of shotgun loads.

New Christmas Fares
Lowest holiday fares in recent years were announced by C. L. Townsend, general passenger agent, to go into effect on the Northern Pacific Railway, December 15. These low round-trip fares will be good between all points in Washington, northern Idaho, some points in Oregon and to Vancouver, B. C.
In addition to being exceptionally low, tickets will be good for an unusually long period. Travelers may start as early as December 15, and not return until January 8, if they so desire. These tickets will be sale daily from December 15 to January 1, inclusive, and will include reductions for all classes of travel.
These reductions mean it will cost only one and one-third fare for the round trip and will be good on trains including the North Coast Limited. Holiday menus will be featured in all Northern Pacific dining cars, as well as tray service in the coaches and tourist sleepers.
