Leonora straightened the objects on her desk with great care. She had but her desk at the end of her room facing the door so that when her mother came in she would have to ross the whole room under Leofora's stern executive eye to get to ner. From movies and pictures in the newspapers Leonora had gotten a ood idea of how the desk of a busy woman of affairs should look.

With an important scowl, Leonora ploked up a sheet of paper. Now she was two people—herself, the busy woman, and her own stenographer.

Idaho Contributes Much

One year after Pearl Harbor, the inland state of Idaho may take great pride in its contributions to the United States Navy -- both in manpower and otherwise.

First and foremost in the Gem State's naval accomplishments is the vast training station at North Idaho's Farragut, or lake Pend d'Oreille. It ranks among the nation's greatest, with thousands of youths now receiving their naval training on the timbered shores of this expansive north Idaho lake.

Any one of the "boot" bluejackets (new men to the navy) will tell you they now are experiencing the greatest health-building and educational period of their lives. Approximately 3,000 Idahoans have enlisted in Idaho navy recruiting stations since last January 1. Nearly 2,000 have been enlisted at the Boise main station alone since its establishment last May under the direction of Lieut. G. A. He-

Hundreds of Idahoans already have participated in major combat engagements, convoy duties, and other naval activities. Many of the heros on the fabulous and triumphant cruiser "Boise," named for Idaho's capital city, were Idaho mon.

Assigned at present to shore duty in the recruiting service, Idaho has some 80 men. This complement very presently will approach the 100

Most of the recruiters are Idaho men. Some are new to the navy many are veterans of World War I some already have seen action in World War II, and others have fol-GORDON HARRIS, Auctioneer lowed the navy as a career for nearly a decade prior to Pearl Harbor.

of what the expression means. With Clerk of Pine Creek Common some research on the subject, it was School District No. 91, of Latah discovered that Col. G. E. Gerini, in 13-3 his researches on Ptolemy's Geography of Eastern Asia, traces the expression "seven seas" back to Indian and Chinese legends.

From the Puranas Colonel Ger ini has made the following list of the seven seas:

Dignity Is Associated With Prestige, Honor

People are apt to have a mistaken idea of true dignity. They sometimes associate it with the stiffness, severity and frigidity of the Nineteenth century and even the first decade of the Twentieth. Dignity then seemed to connote an aloofness, an insistence upon deference, a cold detachment that could not but repel when it did not actually irritate. Most of us interpret dignity today as a beautiful serenity, a something backed by lofty purpose, a striving for that purpose with calmness, stateliness and good cheer. Dignity in these democratic days need not be without optimism, friendliness and enthusiasm in full measure. We may couple enthusiasm with dignity, for if this fine quality is applied to any plan as an energizing force, it must contribute its share of dignity to the undertaking.

Dignity has been described as a behavior which wins prestige; and with prestige the mind associates honor, repute and distinction. Dignity thus is seen to be the very antithesis of pettiness, small mind-edness and meanness. It is a term nowadays aligned with the finer aspects of personal and public conduct, winning for those who practice it a very sincere respect. Nor does dignity imply slowness of thought or speech, or action. We discover this fine quality in many a phase of human achievement. There is a dignity in attaining some desired result in a worthy manner. Dignity, likewise, may come in the completion of a plan, though that plan be the fruits of a passing dream. But if, in building that dream into a reality our structure is based on foundations of meanness and pettiness, the dignity is lessened or vanishes entirely.

First Labor Dispute in Early Biblical Times

The first labor dispute of any import happened in biblical times during the building of the Tower of Babel when, according to Scripture, the Lord confounded the common language of the tribes, making it impossible for them to understand one another. Whether the unhappy ending of this heavenly bound project might be deemed a strike of workers against their employers, a sympathetic walkout or a lockout engineered by the owners remains a moot question.

In the United States the first strike on record involved a group of journeyman printers who in 1786 sought a minimum wage of $6 weekly. There had been earlier protests here and as far back as 1740 in England; these, however, were more in the nature of political risings. Work stoppages*with a marked social significance were not apparent until the industrial revolution brought about the rise of large-scale industry.

Accurate records of strikes and lockouts have come into being since 1880 both here and abroad. The general strike which gripped England following the coal-mining dispute in 1926 was the most alarming ever experienced in the British Isles. It affected more than 2,500,000 persons. of whom nearly 60 per cent were involved in sympathetic strikes.

Spanish Morocco

Spanish Morocco, always destined to play a part in Mediterranean conflicts, again looms as a danger spot. It may become a landing place for Axis troops headed for the Libyan war theater.

The British fleet bars the Axis supply lines from the heel of the Italian boot. Another possible route to Libya is that through Spain, to Spanish Morocco and then across the desert into the Italian posses-

At present the Rock of Gibraltar, proud and defiant with gun emplacements bristling, is the chief stumbling block to such a move.

As early as 1937, when Generalissimo Francisco Franco was making his greatest headway against the Loyalist troops, Germans were building troop barracks and fortifications in Morocco for possible use in an African campaign.

Ant Surgeons In Bali, a species of large ants performs the surgical job of suturing wounds, according to the traveler-physician, Dr. F. C. E. Knight. He revealed the use of ants as surgeons in describing cockfighting in Bali. The Balinese have no knowledge of how to stitch up human wounds but have developed an ingenious method of closing wounds incurred by their rooster "champs." The natives hold the ant by its middle and make it bite the wound so each mandible embeds itself in one lip of the wound. Then the ant is cut in two, leaving the mandibles clamped on the wound, thus holding the edges together.

Foods Gelatinized

Mrs. Mildred Chase Cook of Chase Sanitarium, Calif., has developed a method for keeping foods looking fresh while being exhibited at fairs and other displays. All the liquids are gelatinized. And all the foods. including berries, and vegetables like sliced tomatoes, are heavily coated with a gelatin mixture of three tablespoons of dry gelatin to one cup of water. Even the meats, fried eggs and hams, surfaces of grapefruit and those of potatoes and peas are coated. The gelatin mix- Oldest of the many large-sized hills ture was boiled in order to lengthen to turn up in local cash registers

War Foreseen In Antipodes

Sort of Attack the Japanese Are Making Was Long Expected There.

WELLINGTON, N. Z.—While the rest of the British empire is still adjusting itself to the fact that Australia faces a threat of invasion, Antipodeans have long realized that the thousands of miles of ocean which separate them from Japan offer no decisive protection against direct attack.

Moreover, Australians foresaw the sort of attack which the Japanese have been making, an inva-sion by stages ultimately directed at the industrial regions which nourish Australian resistance. Years before the attack on Poland an examination of the Antipodean country's defense needs led to the conclusion that assault by sea and air would precede attack by land, and that the probable first move of the Japanese would be to attempt to knock out Australian air power.

Command of the Air.

Thus it was declared by military chiefs that "aircraft carriers, convoyed by other warshps, could reach Australia perhaps six weeks before the invader's army" (this point of view was advanced by those who thought that even without the fully expected move to seize the Philippines and the Netherlands East Indies an attack on Australia was possible) and that "this would enable the battle for command of the air to be fought before the attacker was embarrassed by a fleet of transports" while at the same time the attacking warships clamped down a blockade.

The first need of Japan was seen as an advanced base where airfields could be established. Even if this were established in a non-vital area it would help, for it would serve as a distribution to the defense and would give alternative lines of attack if a more direct approach to the main goal failed.

The main goal, in terms of geography, was set down as the narrow coastal strip between Newcastle and Port Kembla, New South Wales. It was thought that the desire to conquer territory and not the doctrine of attacking the enemy's main forces would mold the Japanese strategy.

The Unguarded North.

It was realized by Australians themselves long before World War II that the center of gravity of their defense system was too far to the southeast. Hence, the progressive plan revealed to extend the defense industrial set-up to other states. This diminished the demands on the far-reaching Australian transportation system and advanced toward the goal of regional protec-

Defensively, Australians are not so interested in their unguarded north as might be expected, for the. reason that since the Japanese have moved so close the once-feared foothold on the northern shores has ceased to have its old meaning.

Years ago it was held that an invading force would be limited by available tonnage to a maximum of 60;000 men. That was when invaders would have had to come from distant Formosa and when South China was still free of Japanese. Today, with the Nipponese established nearer, a larger force could be moved-would have to be moved.

But the key to the whole situation is still seen as tonnage, and the hope of Australians continues to be that any attack would be beaten off with such heavy losses of ships that it would permanently impair Japan's war-making capacity, especially since the Coral sea and Midway battles.

Age Brings Bigger Ears And Broader Features

The ears get larger, the nose gets longer and broader, and the mouth gets wider as one grows older. The curious age, changes in the dimensions of these facial organs, sufficient to change materially the appearance of the individual, have been established by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology of the Smithsonian institution, by measurements of thousands of men and women—white 'Old Americans," Pueblo and other Indians, Eskimos and Negroes.

When one meets an old friend after a lapse of years, there is often a vague unfamiliarity about his features which cannot easily be explained. "You've changed somehow, but I can't say just where," is a common remark. Part of the change, it is probable, is due to these altered dimensions of the mouth and nose.

Among the white "Old Americans," says Dr. Hrdlicka, "both the nasal breadth and length increases during adult life, but the increase in breadth exceeds somewhat that in length. With the ears, conditions are reversed—they increase more in their length. Both the Pueblos and other Indians show similar conditions, and at least as pronounced. The length of the nose and the breadth of the ears increase with age but slightly; the nasal breadth, however, and the ear length increase decidedly."

The effects of age on the mouth, Dr. Hrdlicka pointed out, are even more marked than those of the nose.

Where Did Cabot's Ship Land? Opinions Differ

When one of John Cabot's crew of 18, peering through the mists at 5 a. m., June 24, 1497, joyfully shouted "Land, ho," what land was he looking at? That the North American continent was at that moment being discovered historians generally agree. But there has been learned disagreement on whether Cabot's ship, the Mathew, was putting in at the northern tip of Cape Breton island or somewhere in Newfoundland or Labrador.

Prof. Leo E. F. English, recently inspector of Roman Catholic schools. has now placed arguments before the Newfoundland Historical society which he says indicate that Grates cove was the disputed landfall.

Professor English claims to have found a large rock on the foreshore of this harbor on which are letters, undecipherable now with the naked eye. When a photograph of the letters was placed under a microscope, however, he said the letters were found to be: IO COBOTO

Professor English contends that the Italian Cabot placed his Venetian name, Giovanni Caboto, on this rock. He explains that the RIC is no doubt part of the name Henricus, or Henry VII, the Tudor king of England, under whose patronage Cabot put out from Bristol, England, May 2, 1497.

British Guiana possesses one of the world's great natural wonders-Kaieteur falls. It is only 150 miles from Georgetown, the capital, but has been seen by few white men! The trip from Georgetown to Kaeiteur and return takes seven days and is made by rail, river steamer, motor car and launch. The falls have a sheer drop of 741 feet, making them five times as high as Niagara!

Dutch Guiana

Dutch Guiana figured in one of history's most spectacular trades and most spectacular blunders. In 1667 Holland gave New Netherland (roughly what is now New York state)—to England in exchange for the colony that is now Dutch Guiana. Tropical colonies were more valued at that time than those in colder climates — and South America seemed more promising than North America.

Today the population of New York state is about 75 times greater than that of Dutch Guiana—and there are 13 cities in the modern New Netherland which surpass Paramaribo. Dutch Guiana's largest city, with its 54,852 inhabitants.

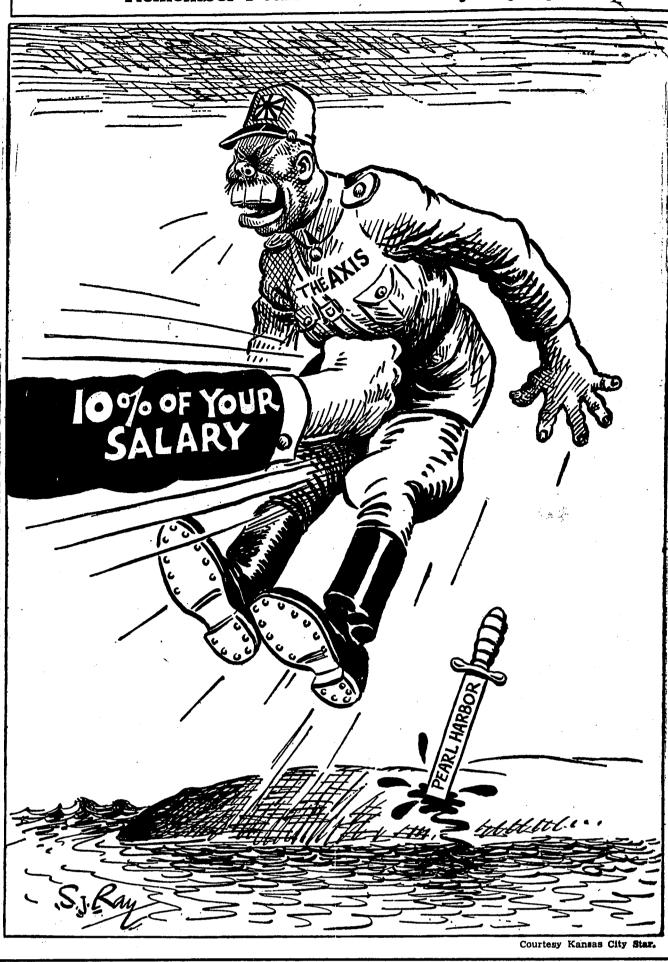

Today Dutch Guiana figures again in history for the world's major supplies of bauxite, principal source of aluminum, are located there.

Golf Ball Speed

Getting hit on the head by a golf ball an instant after it takes flight from the tee easily might write "finis" to one's life. This is indicated by research which appears to prove that such a ball, if struck by an expert, is traveling at a speed of around 150 miles an hour! And the head of the club is moving at a better than 100-mile-per-hour velocity taken at one 1-100th of a second intervals. Bobby Jones was the test subject.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS....

"Had any news from George and his family since they moved away, Judge?"

"Yes, I had a letter from him day before yesterday. He's in Kentucky...the family's fine and they all like it there. George says he has a fine job in a beverage distillery. He brought out an interesting point in his letter I hadn't thought of before. He said that while the beverage distillers are working 24 hours a day, 7 days a week turning out war alcohol for the government for ammunition, tires, medical supplies and chemicals, they still are able to account for nearly a billion and a half dollars in taxes each year. That's on account of the fact the beverage distillers, though working 100% for the government, are still able to supply the public with beverages from the reserve stocks made during peacetime.
