Check Your Hens For Profits
Cull hens, the birds that take the profit out of poultry, give themselves away during the last days of summer, says C. E. Lampman, poultry husbandman at the U. of I. "This is the easiest time of the entire year to cull your flocks," says Lampman. "Even the hens that are laying now and are about to go out of production give every indication of their future plans and make it easy to get them out of the flock almost to the day that they lay their last egg."

Lampman says the hen that is still in the laying business is ragged and rough at this season of the year. Her plumage is dry and frayed and the feathers may be broken over the back and tops of wings. Often there are no feathers on top of the head, which is the basis of the old saying "A bald-headed hen is a good laying hen."

Then there is the hen that has been laying most of the summer but has already quit. She is the hen with the shriveled comb, the hen that is either fat enough now to furnish some family a good Sunday dinner, or soon will be. She may already have a new coat of feathers. Lampman points out, but the shriveled comb gives her away as a non-layer.

About half of all the hens in Idaho have to be replaced with younger stock each fall," the poultryman explains. "Some of our poultrymen keep their old hens over for the winter, but most of them want pullets in their laying houses. Culling should be well under way in most of Idaho this month. That means that something over 1,000,000 hens will either go into the frozen foods locker or to market for others who may want to store them for fall and winter use."

Contribute Carload Of Wheat
The farmers of Quincy, Wn., have scored again by assembling the first carload of wheat for the United Church Overseas Relief CROP Program. This is the second consecutive year Quincy has held this honor in Washington and northern Idaho. The Rev. Charles A. Weishaupt of Quincy, CROP supervisor for Douglas and Grant counties, led his community in its achievement. Last year Quincy contributed two carloads of wheat to this cause.

The CROP campaign will culminate with general solicitation in the rural sections of Washington and Idaho between Nov. 1 and 15.

IDAHO IS BEGINNING TO DISCOVER ITS HISTORY

Boise — Idaho is discovering that it has a romantic and colorful past, the Idaho State Chamber of Commerce observed this week. More and more people, said the Chamber, are taking an interest in the historical eras of Idaho's settlement, mining, ranching and irrigation development. For instance, Tad Shanks of Grangeville, while excavating for a new creamery in that town, dug up a $10.00 gold piece, dated 1902. Old timers began to talk about the find and some of them remembered that a saloon had been on the site in the early days. There followed many hours of recounting stories and legends of the old saloon.

Up at Leesburg, ghost town in the Lemhi country, the ghosts are moving out. The reason is that old Leesburg, one of the west's most famous gold camps, is coming back to life as a mining town again. A Pocatello firm and an Alaskan mining outfit have moved in to re-work the old Channel claims and others where millions of dollars in gold were taken out many years ago. In its heyday, Leesburg placers produced $16,000,000 in gold, or a million dollars more than President Thomas Jefferson paid for the famous Louisiana Purchase. Gold was discovered in the area in 1866 by a group of men among whom were former Confederate soldiers. The town was named Leesburg in honor of the Southern military leader, Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Citing these two instances, the dispatch adds there are many more old towns and historical sites worthy of note, adding that Idaho is discovering its heritage of the past and reliving the dramatic days of its beginning.

Perhaps not so exciting, but certainly of more interest, is the fact that Idaho had not yet been admitted to the Union as a state when the 15th Territorial Legislature, in 1889, voted to establish a university. Classes began in the University of Idaho at Moscow, in 1892, after Idaho had become a state. From a small beginning, the university has steadily grown, adding college after college through the years. It now has colleges of Agriculture, Letters and Science, Engineering, Law, Mines, Forestry, Education, and others. The enrollment in 1947 was 40,748. The 1947-48 enrollment is given as 3,814 students in the university; 303 non-residents; 22 special students; 1022 summer school students, and 21 in absentia.

In addition to the main campus at Moscow, the university has agricultural experiment farms at Moscow, Sandpoint, Caldwell, Aberdeen and Teton. It also has experimental field laboratories at Boise, Twin Falls and Parma, as well as special plots, such as weed control experiments, in other parts of the state.

Agricultural extension offices are maintained in about 40 of Idaho's 44 counties.

The university is supported by appropriations made by the state legislature, by federal funds, and by income from investments. It is a land-grant college. As Idaho's largest institution of higher learning, the University of Idaho is widely recognized for its proficiency in teaching all phases of education.

Watch Chickens And Turkeys

Turkeys now on feed for the Thanksgiving table or for the trade will have a better chance of reaching maturity if poultry raisers keep them away from chickens this summer. There's real danger in raising chickens and turkeys on the same land, warns Dr. L. H. Scrivner, station veterinarian at the University of Idaho.

Scrivner says some diseases which are fairly mild in chickens can be extremely serious in turkeys. To be assured of healthy turkeys staying that way until Thanksgiving, keep them away from other poultry at all times, he suggests.

Many Warm Springs In Idaho
Boise — Back in 1880, a Boise driller went down to 400 feet and released a flow of highly mineralized hot water. Further drilling over a 10-acre tract produced a flow of 800,000 gallons daily. The water has a content of 12 minerals and a natural temperature of 170 degrees. The springs were soon put in use to provide water for a natatorium, and a little later many homes along Warm Spring Avenue in Boise were piped and have used the springs for heating for more than 50 years.

But there are thousands of springs in Idaho both hot and mineralized, from the Wyoming border to the Oregon line, the Idaho State Chamber of Commerce points out.

At Alpine on the South Fork of the Snake river a few miles this side of the Wyoming line are the first ones. There are also hot springs at Bear Lake in southeastern Idaho. All along highway 30 are some of Idaho's noted hot springs and mineralized gushers — Soda Springs, Lava Hot Springs, Downata near Downey, Indian Hot Springs near American Falls, and others from Oakley and Twin Falls along Snake river to Givens Hot Springs near Marsing. The upper Snake river area has dozens of springs, and the mountains of Idaho are full of them. Among the oldest are Clarendon Hot Springs near Halley, which were used 50 years before Sun Valley was founded.

So far as the State Chamber can learn, there has never been a count made of Idaho's hot and mineral springs. The water from hundreds of them has never been analyzed and no one knows what mineral content they might be found. There are 22 different degrees of mineral content in the various springs at Soda Springs. The more than 20 springs at Lava Hot Springs constitute, in both volume and mineral properties, the most remarkable group of hot springs in the state. Horse Creek springs in the Salmon Forest are unexploited, since they are accessible only by pack trail. Warm Lake Springs in the Boise National Forest, however, have been developed and are very popular.

Our Note: Seems as if some of the most famous hot springs in northern Idaho are not known down south. For instance — the hot springs at Riggins; Red River Hot Springs, and last, but probably the oldest in line of human use are Jerry Johnson Hot Springs, which were used by the Indians long before the coming of the white man. Red River Hot Springs were used by the whites in the days of the famous Buffalo Hump gold rush, about the close of the Civil War.

The High Cost of Socialism

THE NEW AUSTERITY BUDGET disclosed to the people of Great Britain by Sir Stafford Cripps, chancellor of the exchequer, should disabuse them finally and utterly of their expectations of getting "something for nothing" under the socialist form of government which is their present and very great burden.

The higher taxes and higher costs of food and of all other essentials as well as luxuries grimly imposed by Sir Stafford, and quite honestly and courageously acknowledged by him to be the unavoidable consequence of the various socialist enterprises, leave no room for further illusions or deceptions.

The great fraud of socialism, in Great Britain or elsewhere, is in the fact that people are persuaded that essential commodities can be produced or essential services performed without cost to the people, or at least at lower cost, by the simple expedient of taking the related industries away from their real owners and making their operation a government function.

Everything done under socialism is done under the pretext that the profits of private enterprise constitute an extortionate part of the cost of essentials to the consumer, and that it is only necessary to let the government produce the goods or perform the service in order to give the consumer necessary things at lower prices or entirely free of cost.

The most flagrant example of fraudulent practices under socialism in Great Britain is offered by the most recent of its nationalization projects, that of medicine — which the people almost universally anticipated would mean "free" medical and hospital services.

Actually, the total costs of medical and hospital services in Great Britain since nationalization have skyrocketed in a manner to bring the national economy to the brink of bankruptcy.

And for this tremendously increased cost of supposedly "free" medicine, the people have received an inferior and inadequate quality of service in contrast with the high standards of service under the traditionally free professions.

Instead of emancipation from doctors' bills, the people of Great Britain under nationalization of the medical professions have been put deeper than before into the bondage of the tax collector.

All the socialistic enterprises of the Labor government in Great Britain have brought the people similar experience.

For every small saving purportedly effected by the elimination of the profits of private enterprise there has been a mushrooming of real costs under government operation, with inefficiency and incompetency and even corruption heaping unprecedented burdens upon the people.

Today the enterprises of Great Britain's socialistic government are being supported by taxation that absorbs up to 45 per cent of basic income, and by further taxes equal to as much as 100 per cent of the production cost of goods and services essential to the people.

By comparison, the highest profits ever exacted by private enterprise in the history of Great Britain would be considered a bargain today.

Instead of contributing to the profits of industry, which always replenished and enhanced the resources of the country and created the highest peaks of prosperity the people have ever known, the extortionate and confiscatory taxes of the British people are merely fulfilling the socialist dreams of vast power and are bringing closer to fulfillment the socialist dreams of perpetual power.

Watch It Boys — Watch It!

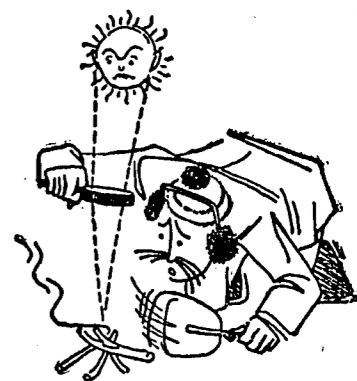

"There is absolutely no resemblance between a pheasant and a cow," Prof. Safe T. First, state game department consultant, unhesitatingly stated this week. After intensive studies on the appearance in the field, the learned professor declared there was positively no resemblance — no excuse — for anyone to shoot a cow by mistaking it for a pheasant.

Of course, Prof. Safe T. First is a mythical character, but his ideas are sound reality. Any hunter who commits "boycide" is just plain careless. There's an army of good sportsmen who suffer everytime some careless joyrider runs wild with a shotgun and pots a farmer's cow — or his chickens — or his turkeys — for that matter.

The game department recommends that all hunters stop in and ask the farmer whether or not they can hunt on his ground — and where he has cattle grazing, so this latter area can be avoided. Farmers do not come to town and play baseball in city dwellers' china closets, and there's no more reason for townspeople to go spraying shotgun pellets among farmers' livestock, the department reminded. An ounce of first-hand consideration is worth a pound of hind-sight regret.

Fresh frozen fruits, berries, juices, vegetables, fish and poultry are obtainable at Blewett's Grocery-Market. Remember: "For a Better Buy, Buy Bird's Eye." 1-adv.

PUBLISHED BY THE KENDRICK CO-OPERATIVE CREAMERY

HELLO, THERE FOLKS:

"Part Time Can Pay!"

Yes, folks, just a part of your spare time on the farm can be made to pay real dividends — and at no additional investment in material. How, well the answer is very simple — by taking better care of your cows, or by putting another one or two into production. You see, feeding, watering and milking takes just a little while each day — and even at today's high prices the proceeds will often pay the grocery bills, or maybe that vacation trip you have been wanting — or maybe buy that new car, truck or pickup.

Of course we want to buy that cream. We pay full market price, and, being a co-operative, dividends.

Bring or send that can to us. Chances are your neighbor does the same thing. And now, our talk over, we're devoting the rest of this space to laughter.

"You ladies ought to sit a little closer," said a male straphanger on an English bus. "According to the Act of Parliament every passenger is entitled to 18 inches of seating space."

"You can't blame us," replied a matron tartly, "if we aren't constrained according to the Act of Parliament."

"But, Doc," argued the sailor, "I'm only here for an eye exam. I don't have to take off my clothes for that."

"Strip down and get in line," shouted the pharmacists mate. The sailor obeyed but kept on grumbling. The chap in front of him finally turned around and said: "What are you kicking for? I only came here to deliver a telegram."

And don't forget — we want to buy your cream!
