Learn to Increase Production 4-H Club members in Idaho are earning ways to increase food and fiber production through efficient use of electricity, prevention of accidents and maintenance of family health. Special recognition will be given to those who submit the best eports of accomplishment.

In the 4-H Farm and Home Electric and Safety programs, medals of honor are provided for county winners, respectively, by Westinghouse Educational Foundation and General Motors. In the 4-H Health program, attractive centificates are given to our clubs in each county by the Kellogg Company, of Battle Creek, State winners in all these programs receive educational trips to the 1951 National 4-H Club Congress, Chicago, in November. In addition, the ten clubs in the State reporting the best group program of health improvement each receives $20 for health education.

National awards are $300 college scholarships for six selected State winners in 4-H Electric and eight in the Safety program. In the 4-H Health program a $100 U. S. Savings Bond is awarded to each member of the Blue Award group, to be used by the winners to start a fund for protecting and maintaining their personal health.

Last year's State winners in Idaho were: Farm and Home Electric — Harvey Dale, Potlatch; Farm and Home Safety — John Huber, Jr., Cataldo, and Health — Warren Sey-fert, Idaho Falls, also a national winner.

All three programs are supervised by the Cooperative Extension Service. Complete information will be furnished by County Extension

The writings of that quill pen of three-quarters of a century ago etched deep into the pages of Idaho history as it wrote that "it is not only from a military point of view that the proposed road is important. It would greatly facilitate the development of the natural resources of that portion of Idaho Territory, rich in wealth, both of the precious metals and for agricultural and stockraising purposes, and which is settling as rapidly as can be expected under the adverse circumstances and difficulties of locomotion.

"Such a road will amply repay the United States for the moderate outay asked. Your Memorialists would therefore earnestly pray that your Honorable body make an appropriation for the amount necessary for the construction of said road.

It was not, however, until about a third of a century ago that the completed roadway became identified as the North & South highway as the early lawmakers suggested. At the last session of the Idaho legislature, a bill proposed renaming the highway the "Gold Trail," although no action was taken on the suggestion.

The North & South highway of today follows U. S. Route 95 through the heart of the richest scenery in Idaho. Route 95 Association officials are claiming the route as the most scenic in the nation and the longest arterial highway in Idaho. Nearly 600 miles of the road is within the Gem State, giving Idaho what state highway leaders point to as the "closest approach to a real Idaho road."

Highway 95 begins near the Mexican border and enters Idaho 29 miles from Marsing. It joins Highway 30 at Fruitland to Weiser, then extends in a northerly direction to New Meadows, Grangeville, Lewiston, Moscow, Coeur d'Alene, Sandpoint, and Bonners Ferry, finally leaving the state at Eastport for Calgary, Canada.

One of the finest and most modern dairy barns in the United States, using the newest building materials and developments to safeguard against fire, was completed re-cently on the Wood Ford Farm at Avon, Conn. Forty feet wide and 267 feet long, the barn houses 100 milking cows. It includes also a large feed room, box stalls, an office, a room for employees, and a well-equipped milk room. Fire destroyed the old dairy barn

The strains also have a lower nicotine content. This, too, is a major advance, because nicotine in present day burley-used principally in blended cigarettes—is higher than is desired.

A third point about the new plants is that they seem to be a little more vigorous in growth than other lines.

But it will be two or three years before growers have these plants, because they must be improved and selected for local conditions before they are released.

The man who originated the new strains is Dr. E. E. Clayton. He developed the wildfire resistance in the new lines from a wild species. The new line was developed after a systematic study of several hundred wild species during the last 15

To keep empty feed sacks from being damaged by mice or rats, take a piece of iron pipe slightly longer than the width of the sacks and suspend it from the ceiling with two lengths of wire. Mice and rats are unable to get down the wire to the sacks. The average farmer will save considerable money in a period of a year by following such a practice.

Helium Effect on Living Organism Reported at U.C.

Helium, argon and possibly other inert gases—gases which do not combine chemically with other elements—are far from inert in their effect on living organisms.

This is reported by Dr. S. F. Cook, professor of physiology in the University of California school for medicine.

Dr. Cook has completed experiments in which he studied the reactions of small animals living in an artificial atmosphere consisting of oxygen and helium or of oxygen and argon.

The artificial atmosphere contained the same amount of oxygen found in the normal earth's atmosphere—about 20 per cent. But nitrogen, which forms nearly all of the remaining 80 per cent of the earth's atmosphere, was removed and the inert gas substituted in this same proportion. The ordinary atmospheric pressure of sea level was maintained.

When helium was used in such an atmosphere, the physiological processes of mealworms, lizards and mice were markedly changed. Similar, but less marked, changes were observed when argon was used.

The principle effects of the two gases were retardation of growth in the animals and an increase in the metabolic rate—a stepping up of the pace of work done by the body in the living process.

The research indicates that it may be useful to substitute helium for nitrogen in air used by men working in some tunnels, underwater construction projects, and some other conditions of high pres-

Hard Pad Canine Disease Gives Dog Owners Scare

A serious distemper-like infection that leads to hardening of the foot pads and nose is being seen in American dogs, but there is no evidence that it is a new disease or that it is becoming more prevalent.

Alarming reports from England, where the so-called hard pad condition is reported to be widespread, have made many United States dog lovers overly fearful of the disease.

Thickening, hardening, and peeling of the foot pads and nose sometimes occur in advanced stages of distemper or distemper-like illness, those seen in typical distemper cases. "Hard pad" may be one of the symptoms so produced.

(2) In some cases, the pure distemper virus-which causes fever, respiratory distress, and diarrheamay be accompanied by a second virus that brings on the changes in foot pads and nose.

(3) The severe illness caused by distemper or complicated distemper can lead to a temporary nutritional deficiency and loss of body fliuds that may account for the thickening and hardening.

Immunization with biological products is the best means of preventing distemper and the hard pad condtion.

New Course in Science

A revolutionary approach to the teaching of science which combines all the sciences in a single course emphazing their relationship to man was described to the 118th national meeting of the American chemical society held in Chicago, by Dr. John Xan, head of the department of chemistry of Howard college, in Birmingham, Ala. Taught without a text, the course is designed to give students a broad acquaintance with the modern scientific world and an effort is made to stimulate their interest in scientific discoveries and periodicals by basing examinations mainly on knowledge acquired outside the classroom, Dr. Xan reported. Ninety to 95 per cent of students finishing the combined general science course have voted for it in preference to the conventional type of science course.

"Candling" Eggs

Candling is used on practically all eggs before they reach the stores. An electric light is placed inside a box with a hole about the size of an egg, in which the egg is placed. In a darkened room, with some practice, it is possible to detect cracks, blood spots, developing germ and the size of the air cell. The latter is the most important criterion of freshness because it gets larger as moisture escapes and is replaced by air. By comparing a few eggs known to be fresh with others that are older, one may learn how to judge the size of the air cell and the age.

Changing "Hand-Me-Downs"

Giving "hand-me-downs" a new and different color via the dye-bath is one sure way of getting little sister or brother to wear them without resentment. Adding a hem, collar or belt will still further accentuate the "new look." Wash and thor-oughly rinse all articles before dyeing, and also remove buttons, buckles and trimmings. Use color remover first, the bureau counsels, when the article is unevenly faded or spotted and when changing to a different color.
