Swim Courses Completed Saturday was a happy day for the children completing their two-week swimming course lessons at the Area Living War Memorial Pools, says

Rich Bradbury, instructor.
For the beginners there were comparatively few that passed the final test. This, however, was due to the fact that for some it was an introduction to the water, while others had been in before, and were not afraid — hence for them it was 'easy." Mr. Bradbury asks parents not to be discouraged, but to be sure and get the children out for the next course of lessons, which will begin between the 10th and 15th of August — for at this time progress will be much faster.

He also announced the pool will be open every evening except Mon-day, and with these hot days and evenings a splash in the pool is a "peper-upper."

Those who passed their swimming course tests are asked to come in and pick up their cards next week They are as follows:

The Saved 100 Lives

Twenty years ago, one of the unsung heroes of the electric industry perfected a method of artificial respiration that has saved the lives of over 100 linemen who came in contact with high voltage wires.

That man is E. W. Oesterreich of the Duquesne Light Company, Pittsburgh. He reasoned that many lives could be saved if artificial breathing could be started quickly after electric shock. Instead of first lowering the stricken man to the ground, artificial respiration is now applied while the shocked man is still at pole-top level.

Washington Water Power was one of the first electric service companies to adopt this method of treating electric shock. Such quick use of every proved safety and life-saving measure is part of the Company policy of looking out for employe safety. W.W.P. files show that several times in recent years this new method of pole-top artificial respiration has saved the lives of Company employes.

Bureau figures show that the 1951 visitor count to July 5 at Hungry Horse had passed the 77,000 mark, an increase of 53 per cent over the record of 50,200 set during the same period of 1950.

Where the heaviest travel does not come in June, but rather in July and August, there is still a slight increase; 58,572 visitors in June, 1951, as compared with 58,626 in 1950.

With comparative figures not yet available from other sources in the Inland Empire, it is apparent that they are certain to tell the same period of 50,200 set during the same period of 1950.
