P. F. I. SEEKING TO IMPROVE FOREST LAND MANAGEMENT

An extensive, cooperative experiment to improve methods of forest land management is now under way by Potlatch Forests, Inc., working with the Idaho State Forestry department, the U. S. Forest Service and the Northern Pacific Railway.

Royce Cox, PFI's chief forester, outlined the experiment last week in a talk before the Inland Empire section of the Society of American Foresters, meeting in Spokane. Cox was a member of a panel discussing "The Impact of New Developments on Forestry in the Inland Empire."

The experiment in block clear cutting with intervening sections of seed trees are being conducted in test areas near Kamiah and at PFI's Camp X on the North Fork of the Clearwater river, and at Camp 44, near Avery. The latter experiment, involving spruce type timber, includes timberlands of PFI, the state, Forest Service and the Northern Pacific, Cox said.

"Purpose of the experiment is to determine if this will reduce the cost of slash disposal and the re-logging necessary to salvage seed trees after they have done the job of restocking cutover land," Cox said. "It is a fine example of private industry and government bodies working together toward a goal which will ultimately mean economic benefits to the customer."

Methods of slash disposal and seed bed preparation also are involved in the experiment, Cox said.

Cox pointed out that by reducing the cost of logging the raw material can be brought into the mill at a lower figure, which is reflected in a lower price of the finished products to the consumer.

This is the basis of stabilizing and improving the position of lumber and other forest products in the market," Cox said. "It is the continuing development of new methods to reduce costs which enables us to practice better forest management."

Tree-length logging, in which his company is a leader, is another method which reduces costs and promotes better forest management, Cox told the meeting.

"About 90 percent of Potlatch's production is now in tree-length logging," Cox said. "We have spent considerable time studying methods which will cause a minimum of damage to reserve stands. Where conditions are suitable, tree-length logging accomplishes this."

Cox said the development of markets by larger members of the industry are helping to spread the practice of better forest management to owners of small tracts of timber lands.

"As owners of small woodlots find places to sell their products, they are encouraged to protect their lands from fire, insects and disease; to pay more attention to reforestation, and become aware that trees, properly managed, are a renewable resource capable of producing income in the future," Cox said.

ACCIDENT COST HIGH

Traffic accidents have cost Idaho citizens on an average of $17 million per year for the past 18 years, according to a statement released by the safety division of the state highway department.

The figure was arrived at by using an experience formula of the National Safety Council. "The council has found over a period of years that for every traffic fatality there are also 35 vehicular injury accidents and 235 property losses, so there has been a total expenditure of $95,000. This includes lost time, hospital expenses, property loss and other factors involved in accidents."

Figures supplied to the highway department by the state's bureau of vital statistics lists 3,219 traffic deaths in the last 18 years, an average of 187 highway fatalities per year. Crofford said that 1950 was the peak year for fatalities in Idaho. "In that year there were 246 lives lost on the highways in Idaho," Crofford said. The bureau of vital statistics reported that there were 185 deaths in 1953.

State Highway Engineer Earle V. Miller said that the highway department is doing everything possible to reduce highway accidents. "Our design safety into the roadway," engineers are consistently trying to Miller said. "Curves are being lengthened, slight distances lengthened, roadways made wider and smoother. In addition we stripe a center-line on all highways of the state system and paint double lines where it is unsafe to pass. Curves are scientifically tested to determine the maximum speed and dangerous spots are conspicuously signed."

Miller said that the safety department is endeavoring to keep a record of every traffic accident in the state. "These accidents are marked on a large map of the state and whenever three or more accidents occur at one spot, a thorough study is made by our traffic department and safety director to determine whether the highway has been a contributing factor. Everything possible is done to correct the situation," Miller said.

The safety division also carries on a year around educational campaign to urge motorists to use caution. "No matter how safely the highways are built, we still have the human element to consider," Miller said. "Every one of us should exercise every precaution possible and cut that $17 million loss down to an absolute minimum." — Department of Highways (Idaho).

Our Comment: We agree wholeheartedly with the statement "No matter how safely the highways are built, we still have the human element to consider." However, we believe that along with the driver education, a real "crack-down" such as has been and is still in progress in the state of Washington is needed! We can't agree with Gov. Jordan on his "economy" move in cutting our Idaho State Police force. Rather than cutting it, we believe it should have been greatly increased!

We suggest that all our state officials, and Gov. Jordan, as well as every motor vehicle driver, should be forced, and we do mean forced, to listen to the radio program "Could

This Be You?" which is broadcast every Monday evening at 9:30 over Station KHQ, Spokane.

Building safer roads invites higher speeds, which go hand in hand with the high-powered cars on the market today. Of course, speed alone is not necessarily a killer — but that, combined with alcohol produces a lethal combination!

More State Police and a Washington State "crackdown" would undoubtedly produce results!

Guessing Game Provides Fun

Correct guesses on how much sunshine will come to Spokane on "wash day Mondays" will win 14 brand new electric clothes dryers for Inland Empire residents.

The novel contest which gets underway with an award of two of the dryers Feb. 1st, is being sponsored by the Inland Empire Electric League, supplementing a "Winter Sunshine" sales campaign of the Washington Water Power Co. in its Washington and Idaho territory.

Robert Wilkinson, managing director of the IEEL, announced from the groups headquarters in Spokane that for each of the next seven weeks two electric dryers would be given free for the best predictions by contestants. Third and fourth best predictions will win free installation of dryers.

Wilkinson said all Inland Empire residents were eligible, with one dryer being given at the close of each week's contest to the top guesser in the area outside of Spokane, and the other to the best guesser residing in that city.

"It's an easy game promising lots of fun for young and old alike," Wilkinson said. Here's all you have to do: (1) Obtain a free entry blank from any electrical appliance dealer; (2) Write on the entry blank your prediction of how many hours and minutes the sun will shine in Spokane on the next Monday, and state in 25 words or less why you would like to have an electric clothes dryer, and (3) Mail the entry to the Inland Empire Electrical League, Room 311, Empire State Building, Spokane.

Entries for the first contest must be postmarked before midnight, Saturday, January 30. Each Saturday midnight following will be the deadline for successive contests of the next six weeks.

Wilkinson said the correct answer for each of the "sunshine dates" would be established by Geiger Airfield Weather Bureau photo electric recorder in Spokane.

New Concrete Practical

U. of I. — Prof. Walter R. Friberg of the department of agricultural engineering at the University of Idaho long has felt that the lightweight wood-fiber concrete he developed in a research project seeking low-cost farm building materials was practical and has many advantages.

After three months in Sweden, where he is devoting his sabbatical leave to a study of building materials, he is more convinced than ever that this product should be developed in the western states, where the wood waste and diatomaceous earth ingredients are plentiful and cheap.

"Wood-aggregate concrete is an accepted and common building material here," he says in his latest report to the university. "I have visited several factories producing it here and have examined such concrete made 30 years ago. My investigations so far indicate that none of the Swedish wood concrete is superior to that developed at Idaho. Some of the methods used here, however, may be combined with those developed at Idaho, with favorable results."

Why gasoline is a real bargain today

Two facts lie behind the low price you pay for gasoline: oil companies work constantly through research to improve products and keep prices low, and they compete intensely for your patronage. That's why Standard opened the West's first petroleum research laboratory 32 years ago—and invests about $6 million annually in research today.

One result you see here. Thanks to competition, gasoline prices (aside from taxes) have risen only 20% since 1925... less than half as much as practically anything else you buy. But there have been other benefits for you, too. Research, motivated by competition, has resulted in a steadily improving gasoline. Two gallons of modern gasoline do the work that required three in 1925, and this improvement has paved the way for lighter, much more efficient car engines that give you more power, performance and economy. Competition and research have led to better gas station service, as well, and to the world-wide search that has discovered the largest known oil reserves in America's history. Last year alone, Standard Oil Company of California invested $225 million in exploration, new oil wells, and improved facilities to keep pace with our competition. The net result to you is better gasoline at prices which make it one of the real bargains in your family budget.

75 years of planning ahead to serve you better

MOTOR MANNERS ARE PART OF OUR DAILY LIVING

The other day a young man passed two elderly women on the street, tipped his hat, spoke, and stepped aside for them to get by on the crowded sidewalk. He walked to the building in which he was to conduct his business and held the door open while a lady with a large package entered; he also let a woman with two little tots go through the door ahead of him.

Anyone who was watching the young man was definitely impressed by his manners and consideration of others.

This same young man was a kindly person to talk to, and he was an excellent sport who could take defeat in his stride.

It is a sad fact, however, that this same young man was not so manly and pleasant when he was driving his car down the road. He was brought into court for failure to yield the right of way, consequently he was involved in a serious accident. The same young man who had stepped aside to let the ladies pass would not slow up enough to let another car through the intersection ahead of him. In games this young man was a good sport, but behind the wheel he was determined to take more than belonged to him. This young man is only a sample of numerous drivers who travel the highways these days. It seems that one of the most neglected points of our education today is the development of "Motor Manners." We study history, math, science, geography, business and many other subjects in our schools, which we should learn because they are very profitable to us, but another very important and necessary lesson that we must learn is that of road courtesy. It isn't all the fault of the young people, for many of the older drivers act the same way when they are behind the wheel.

Every driver should make courtesy his code of the road, if he is interested in cutting the accident rate. Share the road by driving in the proper lane and giving the right of way to others. Allow ample clearance when passing. Give the proper signals for turning or stopping. Dim your headlights when meeting or following other vehicles. Respect traffic laws, signs, signals and road markings. Adjust your driving to the road, traffic and weather conditions.

Practice the same courtesy that you exercise when you are not driving — make courtesy your code of the road — and you will find that your driving is more pleasure and not so much work. — Dwight Croford.

Fish Creel Limit Down

Boise — The following actions were taken by the Idaho Fish and Game Commission during its January meeting in Boise:

The 1954 general fishing season as set for June 4 to Oct. 31, with a reduced creel limit on trout from 20 to 15 fish, or seven pounds and one fish. The commission outlawed the use of any fish, dead or alive, for bait except for salamanders and sculpins, and made it unlawful to transfer the young of any fish from one watershed to another or from another state into Idaho.

In 1954, fish of non-game species may be used for bait in the Snake river from Idaho Falls downstream to the state line at Lewiston, and in the Kootenai river, but the use of salmon eggs for bait in Bear lake will be prohibited.

Season changes on some of the state's more popular streams include the Little Salmon river in Adams county, June 4 to Oct. 31.

Because of a "weakness" in the present "Guides and Outfitters Law" the commission ordered that "it shall be unlawful for the holder of an Idaho Guide or Outfitters License to trap, capture, take, attempt to take or kill any game animal, bird or fish for the person or persons for whom he is guiding or outfitting."

A customer walked into a tailor shop and got into conversation with the tailor about hunting trips. Said the tailor: "Once I was hunting lions in Africa and discovered a lion standing 20 feet away, and I didn't have my gun. The lion kept coming closer and closer until he was only five feet away."

"What happened?" asked the customer.

"He leaped up at me and killed me."

"What do you mean, he killed you?" said the man, "you're sitting here very much alive."

Replied the tailor, stitching away at his machine, "You call this living?"
