Glant Industry Arising From New Patent Fibers

Ever since Adam and Eve left the Garden of Eden with nothing to wear, mankind has been clother conscious. The Bible story tells us that Eve fashioned her first garment from a fig leaf - maybe it was leaves.

We wear clothes from the time we are born. It would take books to tell the progress of the clothes story down through the ages. Long ago it was found that the clothing of the cotton seed was better than fig leaves for human garb. For centuries we have used the skins and wool of animals, as well as the covering of the cotton seed, for our own clothing. Still we were not satisfied. We took the cocoon of the little silkworm for its silk.

But we can thank that same little worm for our modern system of producing fibers for textiles that do not necessarily deprive any other living creature of its coat. We learned that the silkworm extruded a fluid from a spinnerette near its mouth. The fluid became a stout silken thread on reaching the air.

This observation led to a manmade fluid extruded through a memade fluid extruded through a me-chanical spinnerette which pro-duced our first rayon thread. The device was called a "mechanical silkworm." This invention came from France about 70 years ago. During the past 15 or 20 years American inventors, encouraged to find new processor and products find new processes and products through the protection and rewards provided by our patent system, have devised new machines and new fluids to make many new kinds of fabrics for human clothing.

Coal, oil, various gases, glass, brine, and many organic substances such as wood, cornstalks, peanuts, and feathers provide the substances from which we now have fabrics that resemble wool, silk, and cotton.

'Won't Hurt' Boast Not Idle Promise to Army Blood Donor

It takes courage to give blood that will save a soldier's life, but your fears of pain or ill effects now are unwarranted.

Army medical authorities recognize that thousands of Americans who are willing to die for their country if necessary have a horror of seeing blood flow from their veins. Just as many shudder when they think of a needle just under the surface of their skin.

But ask anyone who has ever donated a pint of blood to help replenish the nation's seriously depleted stocks and chances are he will tell you there's nothing to it no pain, no ill effects. But you will have a deep satisfaction that you have helped a fellow American in a critical hour. If you have ever pricked your finger with a pin, you already, have experienced all the pain you will suffer when you give a pint of blood. It's that simple. If you are not physically able, to donate blood, you will not be permitted to do so. You are given a thorough examination before the blood is taken from your arm. A single drop of blood from your fingertip is all that is required for the tests that will determine whether you are able to donate blood. If the results of these tests are satisfactory, the remainder of the procedure is entirely painless. You lie down on a bed and an attendant puts a little procaine on your arm. As the blood is drawn, you feel nothing. In five minutes, the bottle is full and ready for processing and shipment to the battle zones of Korea. Within a few minutes you feel: like your old self again — probably better, for you realize what a precious contribution you have made.

Abe Lincoln

When Abe Lincoln was 21 he crossed the Wabash and encountered the first level land he had ever seen -the fertile prairies of Illinois. At two sites there he helped his father build log cabins. Then he struck out for himself, settling in the village of New Salem, 20 miles northwest of Springfield, Illinois. Lincoln re-ceived his first popular notice in New Salem. He was elected captain of a volunteer company in the Black Hawk War, and later was sent to the state legislature. Afterward he moved to Springfield, the state capital, and New Salem literally dis-appeared. Many of its log buildings were dismantled and carried to Petersburg, two miles north.

to farm homes and rural firms within a radius of 20 miles.

The new rural customers have their own "backyard utility" in the form of storage tanks for large users and "bottled" installations for homes with smaller consumption.

Because they are a part of the Antigo utility system, country customers receive monthly fuel bill just like the town. Fuel consumption is recorded on a meter attached to their cylinders or tanks. Bad weather can't interrupt servsce, since a sufficient supply is stored on the premises in advance of use. Empty cylinders are periedically replaced by company service men.

Since the reorganization, rates have been reduced for town and farm users three times.

Contour Farming Cuts

BURT'S CONFECTIONERY

BURT AND VERA SQUDERS

Soil Losses in Half

Iowa agronomists report that contour farming cuts soil losses in half, boosts corn yields as much as 7.4 bushels per acre and ups soybean production by 2.7 bushels Other advantages from contour farming include lower fuel and operating costs for tractors and other machinery and an increase in the length of corn rows.

The need for more contour cultivation will increase with the steadily expanding acreage of row crops to meet the nation's food needs.

While contouring is a vital step in keeping soil at home, other soil building measures are needed to keep farm land at high yielding levels. Every crop burns up organic matter and uses up plant nutrients. The organic matter can be replenished by growing wellfertilized deep-rooted legumes regalarly in the rotation and by returning manure and crop residues to the soil.

Safety Plug

A new safety plug has been developed that should be of interest to most farmers. It has a tiny replacable fuse. Electrical cords are connected to the plug exactly as they are. connected to the wall socket itself. The fuse blows out should a short circuit develop in any connected cord. This prevents current from reaching the danger point, instantly cutting off the source of fire.

Nebraska Farmers Paid High Cost for Corn Crop

Nebraska farmers paid with two lives, 194 fingers, 18 hands, 10 arms, one leg, four toes and two feet in gathering approximately 225 million bushels of corn. That is last year's accident record. Failure to stop the cornpicker before trying to remove the stoppage of the machine accounted for almost every accident. Farmers should discuss safety problems with their harvest crews.
