The way a car depreciates in value mimost as soon as you buy it, it's a wonder there are even as many of them on the road as there are.

Take the Hawkins' family auto all shiny and just the same shape as the day it was purchased, Mr. Haw-Rins paid nearly $1,500 for it, but the other day he sold it for a mere $150. Even so, he did better than some car owners we know who have sold cars costing that much for as little as $25.00, used.

Rut $150 isn't much; it hardly re-fimburses one for the sentimental wrench involved. To be sure, it was not this year's model, or even last year's. But for economy with gasoline it could outdo the most up-todate streamliner, tail-fin equipped, on the road. And repairs? Well, it isn't likely to need any more on the next 40 years than it has in the last.

The Long Island Automotive Museum got a bargain when it bought Mr. Hawkins' Milburn Light Electric, that is all we can say. And not counting the memories. What cut-up s light electric could be on Main Street between 1910 and 1920! Catching everybody's eye. And scaring the Borses — for a snappy job like that was rare then; not like now when a horse would be more likely to scare

Well, we hope when the Hawkins' brougham drives up to the museum there will be a band playing — maybe name tune like "In My Merry Milburn Light Electric." — Christian Science Monitor.

Fall Fertilizing Offers Benefits

Plant Food Ready For Use in Spring

Midwestern agronomists list these benefits from adding fertilizer in the fall:

1-Farmers save time and work in the spring, when every minute counts.

2-There is no storage problem. The plant food is in the ground, ready for immediate use by crops in the spring.

3-The ground is usually firmer in the fall. Machinery pulls easier and there is less damage from packing down the soil.

4-In the fall, farmers find it easier to get the exact ferilizer ratio and grade they want. 5-Plowing down in the fall puts the fertilizer in moist soil. This increases its efficiency in dry years. 6-It is easier to take soil samples in the summer months and you get quicker return of results. 7.-When permanent pastures are top-dressed in the fall with fertilizer, cattle have extra days of grazing. Top-dressing meadows with phosphate and potash cuts down winter kill of legumes, promotes quick spring growth and helps hold the legume in the legume-grass mixtures.

Fall-fertilized pasture (right) in Wisconsin tests makes quicker, thicker growth, gives cattle more forage, extra grazing days.

The agronomists point out that on sandy soils it may not pay to add nitrogen in the fall because losses of this element sometimes occur. The same may be true on well-drained loam or clay soils under heavy rainfall in fall or winter.

Consumers Will Pay More for Lean Pork

(There's a market for lean pork but not enough lean pork for the market reports National Live Stock Producer, the live stock

A recent survey in Illinois proved that consumers would buy twice as many lean pork chops priced 10¢ a pound higher than fat chops. Even an 18¢ a pound premium for lean chops didn't faze housewives. They wanted lean pork.

Despite consumer preference for lean pork, the average weight and lard yield of hogs is increasing. The average hog marketed in 1953-55 weighed 241 pounds or 9.7 pounds more than the average 231.3 pound hog marketed in 1937-39. Weight has gone up 4% but lard yield per hog is up 24%.

Our present method of marketing hogs is not reflecting consumer desires back to hog producers. Consequently hog producers are not producing the quantity of lean pork that consumers want and will buy at premium prices. First, farmers must raise and market the type and weight of hogs desired and have them ready when the market wants them.

Next, the markets must be able to identify the differences in hog values-indicating to farmers what grade processors want, what weights and when certain hog weights are wanted.

Third, processors must buy according to the value of meat derived from the hog and sell to wholesalers and retailers on the basis of what the consumer wants.

Finally, grades and standards for pork at retail should be developed to follow consumer preferences and merchandising and pricing of pork products.

HELLO. FOLKS:

Well, really cold weather is not yet with us, but this chill, damp weather takes almost as much fuel as if it were really cold. How about that fuel oil tank? Is it full and ready to keep you warm when the cold does come? If not, pick up your phone and call us at 1251. Say "Fill 'er up," and we'll do the rest. Don't wait. Meaure that tank now.

She visited Monte Carlo for the first time. She went up to a roulette table. A friend advised her to put her money on the number that showed her own age. She put it on 25. The wheel stopped. Then she fainted. It stopped on 30!
