TV Viewers Should Know Code for Television Safety

CHICAGO-TV sets now are part of over 40 million U. S. homes.

This rapid growth in numbersmostly during the past decadeunderscores the need for increased attention to television safety, the National. Board of Fire Underwriters says.

Taking the following precautions will mean greater safety for TV families:

1. Call a competent repairman if your set needs fixing. TV sets contain high voltage and are too complex for amateur "tinkering." Unskilled handling can result in severe shock.

2. See that the ventilating holes in your set are clear and open. This air space is necessary because TV sets generate considerable heat which accumulates dangerously when ventilation is cut off. It may be dangerous, for instance, to install your set in a tight cubicle unless it was especially manufactured for such installations.

3. If you have an outside aerial, it may increase the danger of lightning striking your home. Therefore, you should have a ULlisted lightning arrestor. The arrestor is inexpensive and usually is included in the installation of your set by a competent TV serviceman. Make certain it is part of your set. 4. When buying a television set, check to make sure that it has been listed by Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., a non-profit organization which tests products for

Diapers Are Not Cause of Rash

CHICAGO-In spite of its name, diaper rash is not usually caused by diapers. Diaper rash is a general term for several types of skin eruptions in the "diaper region."

The commonest cause of a rash is the formation of ammonia by bacteria after urea is broken down. Other eruptions may be prickly heat, thrush, chafing, allergy, and various types of dermatitis.

All of these rashes are aggravated by lack of cleanliness and softening of the skin, which may occur if it remains moist too long. The best preventive for disper rash is changing the diaper as soon as possible after it becomes wet of the skin and the formation of ammonia. Since plastic or rubber pants increase the likelihood of ammonia formation, their use should be limited to those brief social occasions when prompt changing would be or soiled. This prevents softening inconvenient. Studies have shown that commercial laundering of diapers is much more effective than home laundering in removing and stopping the growth of ammonia-form-

This gives the world a total of 103 "states," and a population rapidly approaching the three billion mark, Asia had the lion's share of the increase in population. All but six of the new states are in Asia.

One state—the Saar—lived and died within a span of 10 years, from 1948 to 1957, when it joined West Germany. The two newest states are Ghana, formerly known as the Gold Coast, and the Federation of Malaya, which joined the family of independent nations on August 31. The 25 new states have about half of the world's population. Perhaps their most urgent single problem' is how to raise living standards among ever-increasing masses that must be fed and clothed.

Diabetic Life Span Greatly Increased

NEW YORK-Since the introduction of insulin treatment 35 years ago, the expectation of life of persons with diabetes has increased greatly.

Only in fairly recent years, for the first time in medical history, have diabetics whose disease began in early childhood attained age 45. Prior to the introduction of insulin therapy, the 'disease was quickly fatal to children.

How We See

The retina of each eye has about 130,000 cells or dots. To print this number of dots would require a piece of paper 10 feet long and 9 feet wide. However this number of cells is packed together in a small space at the back of the eve. The retina is the "screen" on which is reflected the images we perceive.

Exotic Essence Of Our Kitchens From Everywhere

WASHINGTON - Tucked away on a shelf in nearly every American kitchen is an exotic essence of geography.

It's contained in the familiar small tins of spices. Cloves from Zanzibur and cinnamon from Ceylon, along with the fragrant seeds, buds, leaves, berries, roots, and bark of many plants have been objects of quest since ancient Spices, above all other edible substances, have helped shape the fortunes of the world. Spices have been valued above gold and used as currency. Throughout most of recorded history, spices have not only been essential to preserve and give zest to bad food; they have been needed for incense, embalming preparations, and ointments.

No longer are spices so vital to health and comfort, but they remain a valuable commodity in world trade. In the United States, where their use in cookery has sharply increased during the past decade, spices constitute a $150,-000,000-a-year business.

Almost every nation contributes to American spice shelves. Excluding allspice, a product of the West Indies pimento tree, most true spices such as pepper, cassia, cinnamon, ginger, nutmeg, mace, cloves, saffron, and turmeric come from the traditional spice lands-India, Ceylon, Malaya, Indonesia, Indochina, China, and

Early Whale Port Notes Anniversary

WASHINGTON - Sag Harbor, one of America's busiest whaling ports a hundred years ago and currently one of its most picturesque seaside towns, is celebrating its 250th birthday this year.

Heyday of the village, now a popular summer resort and home of light industry, was the mid-1800's. Then the Harbor, a hundred miles east of New York City on Gardiners Bay and the "fishtail" of Long Island, was alive with activity.

Whalemen thronged the village streets. The waterfront was crowded with high-masted claps returning with whale oil and bone or waiting to be outfitted for voyages that sometimes lasted four

The year 1847 was Sag Harbor's busiest. Thirty-two ships brought home 605,000 pounds of bone and 68,000 barrels of oil valued at more than a million dollars.

Discovery of oil in Pennsylvania and the doom of the whalebone corset as an item of feminine apparel put an end to the whaling industry. The last whaler, the Myra, cleared Sag Harbor in 1871 and never returned. She was condemned and her cargo taken over by another ship. Her catch was valued at $32,000.

Produce Counter Big Stop for Shoppers

NEW YORK - The produce counter continues to be one of the most important stops on the American food shopper's list.

In 1956, the average person in this country consumed about 320 pounds (retail weight), of fresh fruits and vegetables, which was equal to more than a fifth of the entire food poundage used. Consumers continued to buy two pounds of the "fresh" for every one pound of processed (canned, frozen or dried) fruits and vegetables, the produce group reported.

Nowadays, a produce department will handle as many as 100 different fresh fruits and vegetables during the year. If only the most important commercial types are included, the U.S. market sees about 285 different varieties of these foods. Actually, there are 7,000 named varieties of apples; 6,000 to 8,000 varieties of grapes; over 2,000 varieties of peaches; thousands of varieties of plums, scores of different potatoes and so on. However, only a relatively small number are commercially important.

Time-Buying Need Not Mean Going in Debt

NEW YORK-"Buying on time need not mean going into debt, says a spokesman for American Finance Conference, national association of independent sales finance companies. He points out that when a man pays $1,000 down on a $3,000 auto. he has actually acquired a capital asset rather than a $2,000 debt, since sale of the car would not only wipe out the unpaid balance but would give a cash balance.

Uncle Sam's Land

The United States government rents over 1.6 million acres, which is equal to one-half the size of Connecticut. In addition, the Federal Government owns 774.6 million acres.

Physical Handicaps Fail to Impede Great Athletes

CHICAGO-Two Olympic gold medal winners have proved it is possible to completely overcome severe physical handicaps.

Harold V. Connolly, 25, won a 1956 Olympic gold medal in "one of the tensest hammer throwing competitions ever staged," even though he was born with a partially paralyzed left arm. This disability served as a strong incentive for his outstanding athletic performances, according to Dr. Ernst Jokl, Lexington, Ky. Karoly Takacs, 46-year-old Hungarian, became as good-or even better-a pistol shooter with his left hand as he had once been with his right. An international champion pistol shooter with his right hand, Takacs lost that hand after an accident in 1938. Within eight months, he was shooting with his left hand, and in-1939 he won the world championship at Lucerne, Switzerland, He won gold medals in the 1948 London Olympic games and the 1952 Helsinki games, and competed in the 1956 games at Melbourne.

Dr. Jokl, who examined both men at Melbourne, said the excellence of Takacs' athletic performance is so great as to place both his preamputation and postamputation attainments in "a class of their own."

Dr. Jokl, who is associated with the Kentucky Rehabilitation Center, Inc., University of Kentucky, said Takacs' case proves it is possible for the nervous and muscular systems to "relearn" a lost skill. In fact, it is possible for an entirely different part of the body to learn a skill formerly confined to another part.

Aswan Dam Is Key To Egypt's Future

WASHINGTON - At Aswan, which furnished granite for the Pyramids, Egypt hopes to create a new wonder of the world.

Near the historic quarries on the Nile, an immense dam is planned to convert desertland to farms and generate vast amounts of power. Like the Pyramids, the dam will be one of the extraordinary engineering ventures of its time. The structure will dwarf the old Aswam Dam, itself a monster five times longer than Boulder Dam.

The project also promises to bring new vigor to Aswan, one of Egypt's busiest cities in the days of the Pharaons. It was a commercial hub, gateway to the South, and the center of a vast gold mining industry, as well as the source of red and gray granite for temples. tombs, obelisks, and pyramid fac-

In recent centuries, Aswan has passed the years more quietly. Basking in the hot sun 400 miles south of Cairo, it has been a popular tourist center and winter resort. In July, the body of the late Aga Khan was entombed at his villa there.

Seventeen Presidents Have Visited Newport

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—If all the distinguished Americans who visited Newport while they were serving as President of the United States, could assemble today for a group picture, seventeen of the thirty-three would be in the mythical historic photo. The number has been in doubt ever since President Eisenhower's Newport vacation when the country's newsmen and feature writers assigned to cover his visit searched for a complete history of presidential visits to the historic city.

The top figure of seventeen was authenticated after a search through old newspapers in the files of the Newport Daily News office and the files of the Newport and Rhode Island historical societies.

The list of presidents who visited Newport begin with George Washington, who was followed by Monroe, Adams, Jackson, Tyler, Polk, Fillmore, Grant, Hayes, Arthur, Cleveland, Harrison, Teddy Roosevelt, Taft, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Truman and Eisen-

Women Voters Continue Numerical Advantage

NEW YORK - Women voters may outnumber the males and are likely to increase their numerical advantage in future elections.

Election records do not classify voters according to sex, but statisticians believe that more women than men are nov voting on the basis of a Bureau of the Census estimate that there were about 4,600,000 more women than men in the civilian population of voting age last November.

Eye Care for Young

Though your child doesn't complain of vision trouble, don't take his "good eyesight" for granted. Children don't know how well they ought to be able to see, and should have regular eye examinations.
