An Iowa farmer, on his fit, to the big city, stopped in a p. cocktail lounge and ordered a beer.

"How much beer do you sell a week?" he inquired.

"Eighty kegs?" said the bartender, amazed. "How?"

DON INGLE WRITES FROM NEW ZEALAND

Mr. and Mrs. K. D. Ingle have received a most interesting letter from their grandson, Don Ingle, now in New Zealand as an exchange student, and have kindly allowed us to reprint it, as follows:

Dear Grandmother and Grandfather: Please excuse me for not writing to you sooner. I hope that you have been able to read the letters I have written to my parents.

New Zealand is only the size of the state of Colorado in area, and has 2,000,000 people, but it has practically every type of operation and methods you could hope to find any place. It has a climate that distinguishes it from any other country, and makes it possible to produce primary products — meat, butter, cheese and wool very efficiently and effectively. Every place you go you see many rye grass and white clover pastures, with sheep, beef or dairy cattle grazing. This pasture is the only source of feed for seven to ten months of the year. Many places they store very little winter feed because they do not have snow or frost to destroy the availability of the grass. It is not all fertile soil, in fact, most of it is lacking something. Lime and phosphates have made a world of difference. Land that would maybe carry one sheep per acre with extra hay, has been developed to carry up to eight sheep per acre the year around. Also three trace elements of copper, cobalt and molybdenum are necessary for proper growth in grasses and stocking in many areas.

I just returned from the South Island and am now in the capital city for a couple of days before going out into the North Island districts for my final two months in the country. My last district was called Central Otago, where the country is very steep and rugged and has many lakes. It is similar to our back country going toward the Rock Mountains, with the main difference that most of it does not have trees growing on it. It has a native bunch grass called "tussock," and there are also other native edible grasses. This area is a famous tourist section because of the beautiful scenery and lakes. All the hills are part of big sheep stations or ranches ranging in size from 10,000 to 100,000 acres. They have Merino and fine wool type sheep on this country. You can not see where the feed is coming from, but it is there. Also in the lower district of this area is a town which resembles Lewiston, because it is in a valley and a center for peach, cherry, berry and apricot and plum production. They also raise lots of apples.

New Zealand is truly noted for and can be very proud of its scenery. There is a thermal area, many lakes and mountains, wonderful crops in areas, and miles and miles of beautiful ocean beaches. But the true beauty of the country, I think, is the people. They are truly wonderful. Very friendly, sincere, and will do anything to make you feel at home. This is especially true in the southern part of the South Island, where mainly Scottish people have settled.

They had me convinced that I was of Scottish origin before I left. I really don't know, but from their example it would be something to be proud of. They tell me that Engel and Ingle are German and that Ingle is Scot, now what is Ingle?

The people are very interested in the US or America, as they call it. They are particularly keen on knowing what the American is really like. Movies and the Service Man are and have not done much good in this line, to put it mildly. This morning Howard, my partner, went to a Methodist Church right next to the business district. Before we left, we had a ride home, an invitation to lunch, and had met about a half dozen young people our own age. We must have looked like strangers and they just started talking to us. It is most interesting this way, and you make wonderful friends.

Tomorrow I am going to a Stud (registered) ram sale with the head of Wright-Stevenson Company, the largest stock and station agent in New Zealand. They handle wool and do everything for the farmer. Market his products, furnish supplies, keep his books or accounts so they pay his bills and loan him money instead of banks. The American farmer would not stand for this, but the New Zealander is used to a socialistic state and seems to like to have things done for him. This man is the director or on the board of directors of 13 different companies, plus his regular job. He is a very forceful person and seems to lack the humility that his position should carry. It should be an interesting day. You might say that he did not impress us when we met him, and we are sure it is vice versa, but we'll try to change this. He may even learn a little about the US and its sheep production before the day is over.

He wasted no time in telling us that our sheep are no good. Oh, well. They have no bulk handling of seeds here at all. Wheat and cereal crops are put into three-bushel bags. They have a very high wheat yield on the Canterbury Plains area about Christchurch. Now days they expect about 70 bushels per acre yield. They get about the same price or a little more than we receive.

Cheerio for now, and I'll try to not wait so long to write this next time. Best wishes, Don."

IN TOURNAMENT

The Kendrick Tigers and the Troy Trojans, figured to be the logical contenders for central Idaho class A basketball honors, went down to the final wire in games in the area last week with victories.

The Trojans squeezed past Potlatch 60 to 56, and Kendrick won easily from Nezperce, 55 to 37.

Troy, beaten only once in this season's play, and that by Kendrick, picked up its 15th win of the season, and has now completed regular play.

Kendrick has two losses on its season's string, one to Libby, Mont., the other to the Troy Trojans.

In the final game of the season Coach Dick Fike of Nezperce used his reserves for the whole game. He said his team had not been playing up to par and he was resting them for tournament play.

Robin Magnuson paced the Kendrick attack with 22 points, while John Smathers had 15 for Nezperce.

Coach Racicot used every player for Kendrick during the contest.

The Kendrick B squad pulled off a 48 to 47 victory, collecting the winning points in the last six seconds of play.
