A Service Of The Thor Research Center For Better Farm Living,

All youngsters enjoy desks of their own, where they can do their homework and club, projects and keep some of their personal items. Yet their bedrooms frequently lack the space for a full-size child's desk.

Here's a plan for an economical, easy-to-make wall desk designed with a fold-up work surface, so that the desk projects less than a foot-from the wall when closed. We'll guarantee the do-it-yourself handyman who makes one or more of these desks for his 4-H'ers, Future Farmers, Boy or Girl Scouts, or other youngsters in his family will be king of the household!

Economical, easy-to-make wall lesk ideal for crowded bedrooms. Children will like it.

A few cuts with the portable electric saw, drilling for a few screw holes, a bit of sanding, and you're ready for assembly of the wall desk, which has a recommended width of 2 feet and height of 1 1/2 feet. Top, bottom, and sides of the desk are 1-inch lumber. The back is perforated hardboard attached to a 1/2 by 1-inch framework, which is fastened to the 1-inch lumber with glue and brads.

The desk is held to the wall with long screws used with corner braces, attached to stud locations. The desk work surface or lid is made of hardboard framed with molding. A unique feature of the desk is that the finishing touch.

Several readers have asked our opinion of the new metal sanding sheets now available to doit-yourselfers, either for use with a portable electric sander or sanding pad.

The idea of a metal sanding sheet, providing a permanent abrasive surface, definitely is catching on and one of the newest, called Carbigrit, is available with different surfaces for heavy or light sanding. These sanding sheets consist of tungsten carbide grits—almost as hard as diamonds—permanently bonded to metal and they do an excellent job of sanding. Use the right sheet for the work you're doing and you'll get as smooth a finish as you could desire.

Metal sanding sheets catching on with do-it-yourselfers.

To make sure permanent abrasive sheets maintain their original sanding capacity, it is well to soak or dip them occasionally in turpentine or paint thinner, being certain to dry them thoroughly before again using, to keep the sanding surface clean.

Another reader sends us a novel suggestion we'd like to pass along. Says he, "I replaced a shoe bag that was a little worn and was about to throw it out when it occurred to me it would be a good way to 'file' my hand tools at the end of my small workbench. I lacked clear wall space above the bench and tools always were a jumble in the drawer.
