

THE ROMANCE OF WOOD

Trees, next to man, are the greatest works of nature. They are the oldest, biggest, and tallest living things.

They have played a most important role in the development of civilization—giving shelter, clothing, and food in the beginning; transformed into a wheel—contributing possibly more than any other single invention to man's progress; converted into ships—without which explorers could not have found new worlds, and in the absence of the wood propeller, man's ability to fly would have been long delayed.

Wood is made by a subtle, complex action of air, sunlight and water and a tree is started on its way by the action of these elements on a tiny tree seed. Tree seeds are of many shapes and sizes and have packed within their protective coverings the beginnings of root, stem, and leaf, as well as a supply of food derived from the parent tree on which it lives and grows until old enough to shift for itself.

The time required for a tree to develop from a seed into a sapling and then into full growth varies greatly. Some of the White Oaks found in the original forest of Pennsylvania showed an age of approximately five hundred years, and it has been claimed that by the rings of the age-old Sequoias of California, among the oldest living things in the New World we can read records of the dry years chronicled in the Bible.

When the time comes that the trees of a forest have reached full growth and have borne seed, they are mature and are ready to be harvested. Although some trees, such as orchard and shade trees, serve man best by living on undisturbed, the great army of trees, the soldiers of the forest, best fulfill their fate and purpose when they are harvested by man just as a field of wheat or corn is harvested. If not, they will rot and decay, and all the energy of the sunlight have been wasted.

It is the forester's problem to harvest wisely and understandingly, plant new trees and remove underbrush so that forest may succeed forest of ever-increasing usefulness and value. Usually every tree that may be cut down is blazed by men with long experience in that particular type of timber. The cutting of trees and getting them to the cities gave to the world a new occupation—the trade of lumberjack, and these men leave behind them a tradition and a memory that will always remain an imperishable part of our conquest of the wilderness.

Much hardship, danger and expense are necessary in the cutting, collecting, and converting of timber into lumber and this in turn into pleasing effects of furniture and equipment that is with us from the cradle to the grave.

New uses for wood are being found daily, and the demand for it in the bulk of the world's industries is growing. It is easily worked with tools into desired shapes and sizes and is a non-conductor of heat and electricity. Many woods are marked by patterns of infinite variety and beauty, whose very irregularities constitute an abiding charm. When, to its natural grain, is added a fine blending of colors and it is given a polish, we have a product that can be duplicated by no other substance in the decorative arts.

In many ways, trees and forests make the world a better place for man. They serve as forms of timber and wood, as protectors of our streams, of our wild life and of our soil and for the source of renewed life that man can find among their shadows.

Readers desiring to know more about forestry, its background and future may obtain these booklets free of charge: "West Coast Tree Farms—Growing Trees for You"—A brochure, in color, describing forestry and lumbering operations in the West Coast area; "Forest Resources of the Pacific Northwest and Their Use," a run-down on the kinds of trees grown in the Northwest, and the uses to which they are put; "Outlook for Timber Industry Evaluated," a reprint of an article on the dynamic management of lumber in the Northwest.

IDAHO PROSPERITY DEPENDS ON WOOD

A SALUTE TO THE WHOLE WOOD WORLD

Wood and wood products are meeting the challenge of an era which demands greater versatility, durability and quality from ALL products of modern industry. From the nurturing of the seedling, harvesting of the mature tree, through a myriad of processes in laboratory and factory, the Forest Products Industries provide us with wood products ranging from the familiar to the unbelievable! The material which helped to build a nation... wood remains indispensable today. So diverse are the uses found for wood in this age of technology, that Forest Products Week, 1961 is indeed a salute from the nation to an industry and the products which comprise a "whole wood world."

North Idaho Communities are observing Forest Products Week with special events. WATCH FOR ANNOUNCEMENTS BY YOUR LOCAL MERCHANTS AND SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS.

DISEASE CONTROL IN SHEEP

Experiments to control Tularemia, a disease especially serious to the Idaho sheep industry, have been conducted by the University of Idaho research scientists producing favorable results from the drug Oxytetracycline.

Test results on the infectious disease of both man and animals are reported in a recent College of Agriculture Research Paper No. 510. Researchers Dr. Floyd Frank and William Meinershagen report that the disease causes serious losses in the sheep industry during the spring of years when the rodent and tick infestations are acute. Case studies made in Southwestern Idaho in 1959, following a year of increase in the rabbit and mouse population, showed excessive losses of sheep one month after being turned out on spring range. The sick sheep, heavily infested with ticks, first showed signs of Tularemia by depression, lagging behind the band and stiffness of gait.

Of the various treatments administered by Frank and Meinershagen, Oxytetracycline gave prompt responses when given in the early stages of the bacteria caused infection and death losses were sharply reduced.

Sheepmen are warned in the research bulletin to be on the lookout for this disease in the spring of the year when rodents and ticks are strongly evident. When Tularemia is suspected, a veterinarian should be consulted immediately.

WATCH THAT TREE PRUNING

With most fruit trees pruning is a complicated process, but not so with the Italian prune, one of Idaho's leading varieties.

In experiments covering a period of 14 years at the Parma Branch Experiment Station of the University of Idaho, horticulturists Left Verner and D. F. Franklin found that trees receiving almost no pruning at all produced more fruit than trees painstakingly pruned each year by several recognized systems.

The most productive trees were those that were merely shortened to about 36 inches at the time of planting and practically left to themselves from then on. Only an occasional branch or a branch that seriously crowded others was removed.

Most of the trees in this group received no pruning at all most years. Not only did they outyield trees pruned by other systems, but they also developed into equally well-shaped, strong trees.

Growers of Italian prunes, according to Verner and Franklin, can save time and money by limiting pruning to a minimum of "corrective" cuts and yet be assured of good yields of high quality fruit.

U. OF I. CARRYING ON SPUD RESEARCH

U. of I. Moscow — The college of agriculture of the University of Idaho is carrying on 27 potato research projects, which include many phases of production, marketing and nutrition, James E. Kraus, dean, reported.

All branches of the potato business are being studied. There are four programs in chemistry, four in agricultural economics, one in agricultural engineering, one in agronomy, two in entomology, two in home economics, eight in horticulture, four in plant pathology and one in growing potato seed.

One of the studies seeks a remedy for early dying, a disease that causes severe damage every year, limiting potato production in some cases as much as 50 percent. Purpose of the project is to identify chemical compounds that will control the fungus.

Recent and anticipated developments in the Idaho potato industry are being studied by two scientists. The general objective is to determine the relationship between the fresh and processed potato markets and to forecast expected developments as a guide to the industry. Another study is under way on the costs of handling, shipping and packing potatoes in today's markets.

Four men of the University of Idaho extension service devote full time to potatoes, Kraus said. Three are concerned with production and one with marketing. Several of these programs are being supported

Today we painted some music

It may seem unusual that these youngsters are painting "by ear" . . . turning music from the classroom radio into colorful pictures. But this is the kind of creativeness the Standard School Broadcast inspires.

Currently, the program's theme is "Music—Passport to the World." Using our listening guide, teachers relate music to geography, history, art, folklore, literature.

This helps children gain insight into the life and culture of the peoples of the world. It leads to better and quicker understanding of both the music and the other studies.

By playing and dramatizing all types of music—from symphony to jazz, Thailand dances to Broadway hits, the program adds a new, delightful dimension to learning.

We started this program 33 years ago, never dreaming our listening family would grow to include 2½ million children in classrooms. Now countless adults, too, have discovered how entertaining and informative the broadcasts are at home.

If you'd like to know why the program has such wide appeal, try tuning in on Thursdays. We think you will enjoy it, too.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES SCHEDULED

Evangelists Kenneth and Lily Wells of Whitefish, Mont., are conducting special services at the Juliaetta Church of the Nazarene. According to the pastor, the Wells Evangelistic Team presents an interesting and constructive program of "Teaching Evangelism." Each evening the message is preceded by a musical program of vocal and instrumental numbers and a variety of unique special features.
 One of these special features is a series of brief, informative discourses by Mr. Wells on "The Bible and Science." With the aid of an illuminated chart depicting the "Cycle of the Earth's History," he presents some fascinating facts concerning the conditions on the earth during the five periods of its history as revealed in the Bible.

 The public is cordially invited to these special services, which are to continue through October 29, each evening except Saturdays, at 7:30. Sunday services are at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

HELLO, THERE, FOLKS:
Yes, it certainly was wonderful weather this past week-end — and we know most of you spent it trying to catch up on fall work. If you used Union Oil Co. Products your tractor and other equipment performed to capacity — for Union gives equipment the boost it needs!

Son: "Pa!"
Father: "Yeah, Son?"
Son: "How come Noah didn't swat both flies when he had the chance?"

Don't slip and slide around this winter. Come in and let us show you the latest in mud and snow treads. It's better to be safe than sorry!

Drunk (to office) peering down at water): "Whatcha lookin' for?"

SCHOOL NEWS

Senior Class Play
What if your father were young and handsome, and a widower, and suddenly married your geometry teacher? Wouldn't you resent it, particularly if that geometry teacher were one of your least-favorite instructors? Of course you would! And so did "Pat Holmes," played by Dee Magnuson, the heroine of the play "The Lovely Duckling."

What she did about it provides good comedy for Pat, sixteen, beautiful, talented and spoiled, had no prejudices against making scenes and causing trouble. To further complicate matters, Pat's younger sister, portrayed by Rona Armitage, who is a child movie star in Hollywood, came home for a visit right on the heels of their father's marriage!

Let Blewett's Market cut and care for your wild game.
