PINE DECLINE NOTED IN AREA

A decline of certain ponderosa northern Idaho is being watched closely by the University of Idaho College of Forestry.

Research Note No. 19, written by A. D. Partridge, assistant professor of forestry and pathology and J. A. Schenck, assistant professor of forestry near Kendrick, Clarkia, Viola and Athol where some crowns became mottled with brown branches, and a few trees died.

Death ordinarily proceeded from outer limbs toward the inner crown. Severely affected trees turned brown within three to six months after the first show of symptoms. On affected branches individual bundles of needles browned suddenly, so that green and brown needles were intermixed.

Professors Partridge and Schenck reported that the condition was more spectacular than destructive because less than one per cent of the infected trees died.

A small dark brown, soft-bodied insect, about 1/16 of an inch in diameter was consistently associated with the declining trees. It was found beneath the scales at the bases of needles. Tentatively, it has been identified as the "prescott scale" or a closely related species which is reported to cause extensive killing of ponderosa pine branches in some areas of the West. It has not been described as important in Idaho.

The insect inserts a thread-like feeding organ into the bark beneath a needle fascicle, and in feeding kills the bundle of needles. The very small size of the insect plus its color and feeding position make detection difficult.

Specific controls for the insect have not been devised, but a reduction of the incidence of injury during 1961 indicates that none may be necessary. On valuable shade trees, similar insects have been controlled by applying one pound of 24 per cent chlothion wettable powder in 24 gallons of water three or four times at two to three week intervals beginning in June.

HEAD OF THE CLASS

The teacher of the first grade had just read to her pupils some nursery rhymes. To find out whether they had been paying attention, she began asking them questions concerning the rhymes.

"Why did the cow jump over the moon?" she inquired.

Little Johnny (a farmer's son) at the end of the room spoke up: "Probably because the milk maid had cold fingers."

THE CONSUMER AND MEATS

U. of I, Moscow — The word "quality" as it relates to meat means many things to the average Mrs. Housewife, says Dr. Leon Orme, assistant animal husbandman and an authority in meat quality research at the University of Idaho.

Nation-wide studies show consumers select lean cuts of meat, but in addition, there are some unseen factors which are also required before Mrs. Housewife is completely satisfied with the meat she buys. One of the most important factors is the tenderness it has after being cooked and ready to eat. In addition, she looks for juiciness and an acceptable flavor. All of these factors are in the consumers mind.

Research in Idaho is working toward the end of producing high quality meat from beef, lamb and pork animals, reports Dr. Orme, who is collaborating on a regional and national level with other researchers.

Guide lines are being developed to help the producer select the efficient and economical feeds. The final evaluation of these studies are, however, detailed meat carcass evaluations to see if the highest quantity and quality of good meat cuts are obtained.

"We want to develop better methods of determining the ratio of lean to bone, which we call "meatiness," says Dr. Orme. "With these improved methods, possibly we can identify these factors in the live animal and will therefore be able to select high quality in our genetic programs."

Although the American housewife has now available the highest quality and most economical source of meat, we can still improve this quality, concludes Orme.

The ideal is an animal which efficiently produces a high percentage of red firm meat, with good marbling and texture, and a minimum of fat. But most important, a taste which has the ability to tickle the palate when eaten.

J. EDGAR HOOVER SPEAKS ON LAW ENFORCEMENT

It is a sad commentary on modern-day law enforcement for any officer to be guilty of a violation of civil rights. In addition to the basic immoral aspects and the attendant public scorn such incidents are all the more regrettable because they are so unnecessary.

But for a few isolated instances the day of police brutality is past. Scientific crime-detection techniques and professional standards have now become the strong right arm of law enforcement and there is no need for any officer to resort to dishonorable tactics. Responsible police officials do not tolerate such methods. They know there is no substitute for penetrative, intelligent investigation, supported by scientific evidence.

In recent years, our Nation has human dignity and welfare. Law enforcement has been most instrumental in these advancements and has been a strong ally of those dedicated to preserving our God-given heritage. Our profession, called upon to protect and help preserve individual liberties, is charged with a sacred responsibility. If we do less than our utmost to live up to this trust, we fail.

We may be proud of our progress, but we cannot be satisfied, as long as incidents occur which give justification to charges of civil rights violations involving officers. Some extremists use these incidents as sounding boards. They exploit civil rights - as well as other just causes - for self-aggrandizement and personal rumors and hatred, and pit one element of society against another. Responsibility of investigating alleged violations of civil rights. This, of course, has never been a popular role. We are criticized on the one hand by those who cry "national police" and usurpation of functions rightfully reserved to the States. On the other hand, we are attacked by those who say we have hedged on civil rights matters involving members of law enforcement.

Our position on both points is well known. Over the years, we have consistently given these investigations prompt and impartial attention without apologies to anyone. This will continue to be our policy.

Let me make it abundantly clear that in the overwhelming majority of the cases we have been extended full cooperation from the agencies concerned. Upstanding police officials realize the most effective means of refuting unfounded allegations is to expose them to the light of impartial investigations. Likewise if the facts prove a violation has occurred, they are equally anxious to rid their agencies of the stigma.

Certainly, law enforcement will not resolve themselves. Where derelictions exist, corrective action is mandatory. There is no good reason why our profession should continue to be the butt of aspersions cast by the blatant, self-styled Samaritans. Let us conduct our business in such a manner that wherever for their
