N. E. A. DISCUSSES TODAY'S PROBLEMS IN EDUCATION

Wash., D. C. — There was a time when the board of education was about three inches wide, half an inch thick, and not quite three feet long. It hung behind the door in the principal's office and was, on occasion, applied to appropriate parts of the anatomy of recalcitrant students.

This was a form of discipline. Corporal punishment and discipline are not synonymous. Recent developments, however, are tending to bring them closer together. Over the nation there is rising concern about what the teacher can do — aside from the many art of self-defense or calling the police — to maintain discipline in the classroom.

"There seems to be a growing trend across the country to return (to the use of corporal punishment) in our schools as a partial answer to the problems of juvenile delinquency." Thus the new report "The Shape of Education" published by the National School Public Relations Association, N. E. A., quotes a recent research study.

The issue became acute recently in Washington, D. C., among other places. There Superintendent of Schools Carl F. Hansen proposed to the board of education that it rescind its rule against corporal punishment. This the school board refused to do and promptly a move got under way in Congress to over-rule the school board. Citing research

Hansen said most educators now favor some sort of corporal punishment, when needed. The time honored precept that "this is going to hurt me more than it does you" has not, however, been revoked. Corporal punishment works in elementary schools, Hansen advised his board of education, but in secondary schools the remedy is suspension or expulsion.

What seems to be the problem, Hansen says, is that where there is a rule that the teacher cannot resort to corporal punishment the troublesome students find out about this — and they take advantage of it. The teachers aren't anxious to start rapping the pupils' knuckles, Hansen says, but they think it would help if pupils knew that, if it came to a showdown, they could.

Among other communities in which the issues of corporal punishment have made news recently are Milwaukee and San Francisco. In Milwaukee the school board adopted a new policy which permits teachers to use physical force "to prevent or stop" a breach of discipline, but the student may not be slapped or paddled "as punishment." In San Francisco, the school board obtained a legal interpretation from its counsel clarifying existing policy. The clarification stated that teachers may do "whatever is reasonably necessary under the circumstances, including use of hands, to maintain proper order and discipline."

In Akron, Ohio, as part of the regular inservice training of teachers, seminars on discipline are held to interpret policy and relate it to actual practice. Akron permits corporal punishment, administered by either the teacher or principal, but only after a conference including both.

Superintendent Martin Essex suggests to his teachers that answers to two questions will help a teacher to decide whether to punish and how to go about it: "Will punishing help the pupil to grow in self-control and self-discipline?" and "Will it make a better working situation for all the class group?"

The general rule of common law is that teachers stand in "loco parentis" and can, within reason, do what the parent would do, including corporal punishment, to enforce discipline. States can modify or reverse the common law principal by adopting a specific statute dealing with the subject. Only New Jersey has a law which prohibits use of corporal punishment as a means of enforcing discipline.

These person were among an estimated 20 million United States residents who are without proof of age or birthplace. The historical records of the Census Bureau provide the only acceptable source of this information for many of these people. Since its beginning in 1790, the U. S. Census has recorded identifying data for almost 350 million people, many of them listed several times in separate censuses. The Bureau has provided copies of these records to about 3.5 million people, as legal proof of age, place of birth, citizenship or kinship.

Persons seeking such a record for social security purposes should go to the local Social Security office, or, for other purposes, write to the Personal Census Service Bureau, Bureau of the Census, Pittsburgh, Kansas, for an application form. A fee of $3.00 is charged for a search of not more than two censuses for one person and for one copy of the information found. Additional copies cost $1.00 each. An expedited search costs $4.00. Expedited search is usually completed within a few days while the routine $3.00 search may take up to 30 days, depending upon the backlog of requests.

The personal information in the records of the 1900 and later Censuses is confidential by law and may be furnished only upon the written request of the person to whom it relates or, for a proper purpose, a legal representative such as a guardian or administrator of an estate. Information regarding a child who has not reached legal age may be obtained upon the written request of either parent.

J. EDGAR HOOVER SPEAKS ON GANGS

Wash. D. C. — In recent weeks nationwide attention has been focused on the inner workings of a sinister criminal syndicate known as "La Cosa Nostra." This federation of professional racketeers is a strong arm of organized crime in America. Its illicit operations span the country from coast to coast, netting its criminal hierarchy hundreds of thousands of dollars daily.

The relentless determination of cooperative law enforcement is beginning to close the circle of secrecy protecting this unholy alliance. It indicates that the continuing struggle being waged against organized crime is beginning to pay dividends.

As stated in my message here in January of 1962, a successful penetration at that time was being made into "the innermost sanctums of the criminal diety," an action which was creating "an uneasy stir among professional vice lords." Information furnished to the FBI since June of 1962, by a federal prisoner, a member of "La Cosa Nostra" since 1930, has corroborated and embellished the facts developed by the FBI as early as 1961, which disclosed the make-up of this gangland horde.

As is evident from a look at the cold-blooded and ruthless operations of such a group, organized crime today is an appalling threat to our democratic principles. Through their unlawful dealings — thievery, gambling, extortion, bribery, blackmail and murder — underworld kings have grown into a dominating force on the national scene. Most have amassed great wealth and accumulated holdings in widespread business enterprises. Some unions are controlled and exploited by hoodlums. Criminal influence in some areas is even felt in the courts, the city halls, the legislative chambers and the law enforcement agencies. This is a shameful burden on a free people.

Recent disclosures in the fight against organized crime serve, in a larger degree, to magnify the enormous task which lies ahead. To know the identities of underworld "bosses" and the intricate composition and operations of their "families" and "regimes" is, of course, not enough. The concerted drive by federal and local authorities must be accelerated and it must be supported by public-spirited citizens in every community.

It would be tragic indeed to lose the momentum and advantages gained thus far because of the lack of public support. Actually, the role of the citizen in the fight against organized crime is relatively simple. It requires nothing more than the discharge of responsibilities belonging to law-abiding individuals. On a single basis, such a contribution may appear to be insignificant, but when combined with similar efforts of millions of other Americans its potential is overwhelming. Most important, illegal betting and shady deals with the underworld should be avoided. Citizens should stand for law and order, report criminal activities, testify in court when needed and work for crime prevention. They should be informed on local matters and support clean government on all levels.

Law enforcement cannot achieve total victory over organized crime without the cooperation and assistance of the honest citizens of each community — individually and collectively. — J. Edgar Hoover.

APPRECIATION DAY

HELLO, THERE, FOLKS:
Harvest is over — the Roundup is over — and fall work is just awaiting a rain — so now is the time to check your supplies of gasolines, diesel fuel, motor oils, greases, etc. — to be ready. And, of course, don't forget your heating oil tank! Phone us a 5421 — we deliver — fast!

It is said: "The only exercise some folks get is jumping to conclusions, running down friends, sidestepping responsibilities and pushing their luck!

You just must try Union's new Blonde Heating Oil. It burns cleanly — yet gives high heat. Try a tankful today. Phone 5421!

Old Ebenezer, the little country town's meanest man, had died. The local minister was hard put to phrase a respectable talk over the coffin.

Eventually he said: "Ebenezer, you are gone. We hope you are gone where we suspect you ain't."

Let us service your car, pickup or truck. We know how! We also recommend Royal Triton Motor Oil. It does a real job of lubrication for you. Come in today!

Always travel "Union".
