OBJECTS TO HIDDEN TAXES, SPENDING

Wash., D. C. — April 15th, the day of reckoning on our income tax, has come and gone. To the wage earner and those on salary came the discovery that last year's much publicized tax reduction brought only minor relief. They thought it big because withholdings had been juggled, giving them more of their earnings to spend. Now they had to pay the piper.

Our huge income tax is a bold and brazen holdup, but at least it's out in the open. I am protesting, as I have often before, about a worse tax. Like a thief in the night, it rifles purses and empties piggy banks — the excise tax.

Webster's dictionary defines an excise tax as "an internal tax levied upon the manufacture, sale or consumption of a commodity . . . an indirect tax that falls on the ultimate consumer." "Indirect" means "hidden" and "ultimate consumer" means you.

The President just sent to the Congress a new farm bill which upped the miller's tax on a bushel of wheat from 75c to $1.25. He glossed this over by saying it would "increase the cost of a loaf of bread by little more than 1c." Bread is basic for the family and children. Raising it even a cent a loaf doesn't go with a War on Poverty. Mind you, this bread tax is for Americans only, not for wheat sold abroad. This exempts the Russians.

There are more than 30 excise taxes, started as war measures and kept because Uncle Sam, the old spendthrift, must have the money. Most of them are not on luxuries, but are right out of the family budget. People with low incomes need an automobile — a third of its price is pure tax. They are entitled to a refrigerator and a television set — each of which is honeycombed with taxes. Everyone uses the telephone, school children buy ballpoint pens. With all our shouting about our standards of living, women should be allowed to buy cosmetics and pocket-books without paying a penalty to their government. As a boy did you ever play "crack the whip?" A line of youngsters ran hand in hand, the biggest at one end, the littlest at the other. Suddenly the big one stopped. Everyone hung on except the little fellow, who always took the tumble. That's the way these taxes work — the consumer at the end of the line pays them all.

One thing is sure. Every dollar that Congress appropriates must come from taxes, and every new program Congress adopts pushes sound tax relief further away.

Death and taxes are inevitable — but death, at least, doesn't become worse each time Congress meets. — U. S. Senator Len B. Jordan.

SKIER VISITS UP IN NATIONAL FOREST

Missoula, Sixteen National Forest winter sports areas last year recorded a total of 259,131 skier visits, Neal M. Rahm, northern region forester, reported today.

This all-time, record high represents a 37 per cent increase over the 188,881 skier visits the previous year to the winter sports areas in Northern Region National Forests.

Rahm says the increase in skiing activity in this area compares with a National 15 per cent to 20 per cent annual increase. "While 1964-65 was a good snow year in this area," Rahm said, "this is not the primary explanation for the sharp increase."

"This increase reflects the growing popularity of skiing and the improved facilities at the winter sports areas in Northern Region National Forests."

Recreational visits to Northern Region National Forests for winter sports have increased more than five-fold over the 45,000 visits recorded in 1951.

Most of the winter sports areas in the Northern Region have been developed in cooperation with local ski clubs, civic groups, and county and state governments. Through this cooperation, roads, slopes, tows, and shelters have been constructed and are maintained for winter sports use.

Some skiing areas have become so popular that extensive expansion has been financed entirely from private capital. The trend is toward commercial development financed by private capital and government loans.

"From all indications," Rahm said "there will be more than 300,000 skier visits to the 16 Northern Region National Forest winter sports areas this winter."

BELIEVES THIS STATE SHOULD HAVE PART IN SALMON RUNS

"Idaho should be made a party with equal voice in the management of the Columbia River salmon fisheries," Senator Len Jordan, Idaho, declared last week.

We supply much of the water, over 50 percent of the spawning beds and care for the young salmon after they are hatched. Yet, it is the Oregon and Washington fish people who alone determine the actual catch and the escapement numbers of salmon that will be returned to spawn.

"I do not criticize the Oregon and Washington fish personnel. In fact, it is apparent that they are doing as fine a job as present salmon fish management science data permits. However, with Idaho's great stake in this resource, we must actively share in developing management programs for preserving the salmon runs in all of the Columbia drainage. Our present position of being only allowed to suggest and observe while actual management of the salmon resources is left up to our downstream neighbors is not right. It does not give us needed assurances that Idaho's interest in the salmon fishery is protected. Idaho must be an active participant in any management program."

Jordan recently requested the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service to study reasons for declining salmon runs. He reported that he is also asking the Bureau of Indian Affairs to determine how the Indians' treaty rights in the Columbia salmon fishery catch can be brought in line with sound conservation management. It is essential to the Indians as well as all citizens who have a stake in the salmon area that sound conservation management be followed," he added.

"There are many unanswered questions in fish management for salmon. Idaho willingly will go along with needed fish conservation measures, I am sure, if it has a voice in the management program. However, until we are equal partners in this, Idaho will be reluctant to close its salmon fishing while downstream fishermen continue to net the salmon in large numbers. It should be noted that there is no dam in Idaho between the mouth of the Columbia and the Salmon River country, which produces a great share of the Chinook salmon. Therefore, Idaho has a definite interest in working out solutions to dams and other obstructions in the Columbia below the Salmon River, in Oregon and Washington.

"In this, as in other Columbia Basin water resources management, Idaho is not going to continue to absorb the shock of the crash landings without having an active voice in the management take-offs and fight."

your own future growth in wealth and population had better give serious thought to the more modest and meager aspirations of your less fortunate neighbors, for if you don't, we will find some way literally to shut your water off."

Dr. Folz explained that the Pacific Northwest in the past has maintained a high level of economic prosperity based upon the export of primary products of agriculture, mining and forestry.

"Whether or not this region, especially its interior areas, can maintain a favorable income rate for its population will depend largely on being able to continue to intensify the production of farm products. A water policy based upon purely economic considerations may not permit this. In that event, one can expect obstacles of a political nature to obstruct any plan that does not give priority to these regional aspirations."

U. OF I. PLANS FOR FUTURE WITH MORE DORMITORIES

U. of I., Moscow — To cope with continued enrollment at the University of Idaho, the Board of Regents, meeting at Boise, authorized the institution to develop general plans and concepts for a new major dormitory complex, it has been announced by Dr. Ernest W. Hartung, university president.

No date was set for the construction of the complex. The go-ahead on planning came the same day as acceptance by the Regents from the contractor of a third unit of the Wallace Residence Center to be opened for women students in September, and followed by a few days an announcement from Washington, D. C., that the Housing and Home Finance agency had approved a $1,300,000 federal loan to finance a fourth unit for the center.

Kenneth A. Dick, financial vice president, said construction costs of this final unit of the Wallace Center, housing 315 male students, would be supplemented with $400,000 of dormitory revenue funds. Construction is scheduled to get under way within eight months and completion is set for 14 months later. The completed center will house a total of 1,050 students.

As the University is expecting an increase in the percentage of women students this fall, the Regents approved the use of Shoup Hall by women instead of men.

Preliminary plans for the construction of a president's home on the campus, presented by Nat J. Adams of Boise, architect, were reviewed by the Regents.

Other board action included the accreditation of lists of courses at Boise College and the College of St. Gertrude were approved, following recommendations by visitation teams from the University of Idaho.

Authorization was granted for the university to participate in cooperative work with Washington State University in a vocational technical education research and development project.

WATER AND USES ARE BIG PROBLEMS

U. of I., Moscow — Political and social factors may be considered as barriers to western water development, but they are factors which have a place in the development and cannot be ignored, Dr. William E. Folz, head of agricultural economics at the University of Idaho, told the Western Interstate Water Conference at Oregon State University last week.

The economist from the "have water" state of Idaho with its limited population pointed out that such a state has plans for the eventual exploitation of its water for its own use, and is likely to employ any means at its disposal, political or otherwise, to assure its achievement of those goals. He added wryly: "What I am saying in as polite a manner as I can is this: 'You wealthy states who have grandiose plans for
