MAGAZINES SENT SERVICE MEN

Several weeks ago the Kendrick W. S. C. S., working through A1-C and Mrs. Clinton Trout, stationed in the Philippines, sent two large boxes of magazines to the USAF Hospital there.

Last week, under date of June 30, from the American National Red Cross, APO, San Francisco, came the following letter:

"May we ask you to thank all the good people of Kendrick who sent the many Reader's Digests to the patients of this hospital through A1-C and Mrs. Clinton Trout.

"Many of the patients here are straight from the battle fields of Viet Nam and it is very heartening to them to know that the people back home are thinking of them. With so much adverse criticism of this war being circulated it is a great morale booster to have a group get together to try and make their hospitalization a bit pleasant.

"We are sure that many of the men will enjoy re-reading some of the articles in these back issues but we wonder, with the high cost of postage, about the wisdom of sending them. Since the tour of duty in Viet Nam is only a year, most service men have had access to all but the current issues of most magazines. May we suggest that if the citizens of Kendrick wish to send more reading matter that they concentrate on paper back books? Each night as the planes come in with the medically evacuated from Viet Nam a book cart is circulated among them. A look of bliss settles over their faces as they snuggle down between clean sheets with the book of their choice. Since most of them take the books with them as they continue their journey the next day, a never ending supply of these paper backs can be used.

"Please convey the patients' thanks to all those who showed by their interest that these patients are important to them. Very truly yours—Mary Lou Warner, Recreation Supervisor."

Worried Wife: "You've just got to cut down on your drinking, Sam. Five doctors have told you it's bad for you . . . and they ought to know."

Happy-go-lucky Hubby: "Yeah, I know, but do they know? You see a lot more old drunk than old doctors."

CARE OF FOOD IN SUMMER

You've been to the supermarket or the corner grocery, and you stagger into the house with two bags full of supplies, set them down, slump into a chair, mop your brow, and as soon as you can get the courage to do so, you look at the thermometer — it says 97°F, and you know the humidity . . . well, that's summer!

So you go to the refrigerator for some kind of a cold drink . . .

Keep Food Cool
But wait, what about that food you bought? Aren't you going to put it away where it will keep cool, before it spoils?

The food processing and distributing industry practices great care to deliver food to you in the best possible condition. Fresh vegetables are often flown long distances in refrigerated planes.

The better stores keep a spray of cool water on vegetables to protect their freshness. Milk is cooled promptly upon milking, pasteurized, iced and delivered safe and palatable. Meat is protected against contamination and heat from processing to delivery. Other types of food-stuffs are handled, packaged and shipped with regard for their particular spoilage or damage hazards.

When you have bought this food, its care is up to you. As a public health inspector I often saw milk delivered to the doorstep in the morning, still standing there in the hot sun later in the day . . . and the housewife complained that the milk soured too soon. Milk, and other foods of delicate flavor need special care — they should be kept in refrigeration except when they are actually being used, and not allowed to stand in a hot kitchen during meal preparation. The same is true of meats. Fish are particularly susceptible to deterioration.

Watch Custards
Many bakeries do not offer custard or cream-filled goods during hot weather, because of the danger of spoilage or infection. When such foods are purchased or prepared at home, it is important that they be kept cool. If taken on a picnic they should be frozen. Mayonnaise or similar dressings are susceptible to summer spoilage unless consistently cooled.

Luncheon meats, and meat leftovers need to be used as soon as possible after opening, since they too tend to spoil readily.

Persons with colds or with infected sores on their hands should not prepare food or touch it, since they may infect the food. This is important at all times, but doubly so in summer, when the high temperatures encourage rapid germ growth. Many picnic and other groups have been made ill with intestinal infections from food so contaminated.

Extreme caution also should be used when potato salad and similar dishes made with oil dressings are on the menu. Chill them right up to the time of serving.

IDAHO RIVERS ARE HUGE AND FAMOUS

For ages the rivers of Idaho have rushed furiously through the state wearing down the land and scarring the terrain with deep gorges.

The Snake river, in its entirety, is over 1,000 miles long and its total drop in elevation is more than 7,000 feet. This accounts for its widely varying characteristics. Sweeping in an arc across southern Idaho, it is the greatest producer of electricity in the state. In addition the Snake river cuts the deepest river trench in the United States — Hells Canyon.

The Salmon river, consisting of three forks — South, North and Middle, and several small rivers and creeks, is known as the "River of No Return" since it is navigable only downstream and then only under expert guidance. Its 425 miles are coiled within the timbered primitive area of the center of the state, and it has the distinction of being the longest river in the United States lying wholly within one state.

The Clearwater river flows through rugged, mountain terrain, bordered on the east by the Bitterroot Range. By cutting through the granites of the Idaho batholith, the river and its tributaries made extensive mineral resources available to the individual prospector in the Clearwater Gold Rush.

Among the great rivers of the north, the Clark Fork, Pend Oreille and Kootenai rivers rank next in volume to the Snake river. The Coeur d'Alene, St. Joe and St. Maries rivers provide passageway for commerce, and their waters are used by mineral and lumber mills. The unforgettable shadowy St. Joe is the highest navigable river in the world.

These are among the larger rivers in Idaho. However, the countless smaller ones perhaps excel the larger both in beauty and service to the people.

SYNTHETIC FOODS

Shortening the food chain to the dining table through the use of synthetic foods offers a partial solution to food shortage problems, says an Iowa State University chemical engineer. "It is an increasingly obvious fact," reports Dr. George Burnett, "that the length of the food chain between sunlight, oxygen, dissolved nutrients and man's table must be shortened and this shortening process had better begin with all possible speed."

WHAT IS SAFEST DRIVING SPEED?

Spokane — The safest speed along any given stretch of highway is the speed at which the great majority of the vehicles are traveling, Robert F. Keen of the Inland AAA says.

Keen, who supervises the auto club's adult driving school, based his statement on a recently published study by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads on accidents on main highways in relation to speed, drivers and vehicles.

The meticulously researched report shows clearly that it is not speed that kills — whether high speed or low speed — but variations from the average speed of traffic.

The lowest accident involvement rate was found for vehicles that maintained a speed at or slightly above the average speed for the section studied. Variations from the average speed, whether faster or slower, resulted in a greatly increased accident rate, with the rate increasing in proportion to the extent to which the driver was going slower or faster than the main body of traffic.

The lesson to the driver is obvious. If he finds that he is passing too frequently — or too frequently being passed — he should adjust his speed. To traffic authorities this finding means that every method should be adopted to encourage all vehicles to move at similar speeds and to hold passing maneuvers to a minimum.

Basic studies for the report were carried out on 800 miles of rural highways comprising 35 different sections in 11 states, and the voluminous data gathered subjected to analysis with the aid of electric computers.

FERTILIZER USES SEEMS STABILIZED

U. of I., Moscow — Idaho farmers used more phosphorus in 1965 than in the previous year, but the total amount of commercial fertilizer remained about the same, Charles Painter, soils specialist of the University of Idaho extension service, reported on the basis of figures from the state department of agriculture.

Painter said Idaho farmers invested about $23 million in commercial fertilizers last year. Of this amount, 68 percent was for nitrogen, 31 percent for phosphorus and one percent for potassium and miscellaneous materials.

"Proper use of commercial fertilizers," he said, "is one of the best practices for efficiency in crop production."

The report said 243,503 tons of commercial fertilizer and carriers were registered for use in 1965. The tonnage was about even with 1964 although there was an increase of 1,464 tons of phosphorus, bringing the total for this fertilizer up to 35,194 tons.

About 51,700 tons of nitrogen were registered for use — almost the same as the year before. About 75 percent of the nitrogen was dry and the rest liquid. This shows higher use of dry nitrogen over liquid in comparison with 1964. Leading carriers of nitrogen were ammonium sulphate, anhydrous ammonia, ammonium nitrate, Urea, Urea, agua ammonia and ammonium phosphate.

Eight-five percent of the phosphorus was dry. The percentage is approximately the same as it was in 1964.

The amount of potassium went up slightly to 1,506 tons. Most of the potassium was supplied by muriate of potash.

SALMON FISHING CLOSURES SUNDAY

Boise — All chinook salmon fishing in the Salmon river and its tributaries ends at midnight July 17, by order of John R. Woodworth, fish and game department director.

The closure follows similar action taken earlier in Oregon and Washington, where no commercial, sport or Indian fishing for summer-run chinook salmon was allowed this year.

Woodworth acted to give complete protection to summer chinook because "this run of fish is barely holding its own. Each spawner produces one returning adult with no surplus for sports or commercial fishing."

He reminded salmon fishermen that the best run of spring chinooks to come to Idaho in several years has provided the best angling in a decade. The lowest number of the spring-run salmon to allow both fishing and spawning was exceeded by over 10,000 chinooks. Woodworth estimates that the total count of summer-run salmon over Ice Harbor Dam on the lower Snake river will not be more than 26,000 chinooks, and probably much lower. The minimum number for safe spawning and fishing is 32,000.

Last year, complete protection of all salmon that came to Idaho was ordered because there was not enough for both fishing and seeding the spawning beds. He said that the total count of summer chinooks over Ice Harbor Dam last year was 14,700 fish. This year's run is expected to be about the same.

SORTING STEELHEAD

Boise — Steelhead trout are here being sorted for "ripeness" at the Oxbow fish hatchery holding pond on the lower Snake river. Rex Stark, fish culturist, holds big female steelhead.

Fifteen hundred fish were handled and over three million eggs taken this spring. Eggs will be shipped to the new Niagra Springs hatchery for incubation and rearing, and released as smolts in the Pahsimeroi river next April and May.

Ideal water conditions at Hagerman and constant 59 degree temperature gives fast fish growth. Steelhead in the wild normally reach the smolt size in two years before they are ready for downstream migration to the ocean.

KAMLOOP COUNTRY

On the shore of Lake Pend Oreille in 1809, David Thompson, fur trader, explorer, built the first two houses in Idaho — his trading post, which he named Kullyspell. The state's first commercial transaction took place here, the bartering of furs.

Bonner County is truly mountain and lake country. Lake Pend Oreille, almost entirely within the county, is the largest lake in Idaho and one of the largest fresh water lakes in the United States. Here was caught the state record 37-pound Kamloops trout. It contains a number of islands and has been sounded to depths of around a half mile.

Beautiful Priest Lake is also in this county, which makes Bonner one of the most water-surfaced counties in Idaho. The beauty of the lakes as well as their contributions to living attracted traders and settlers alike during the years the country was developing.

The Selkirk Mountains, the Cabinet Mountains and the Bitterroot Mountains form skylines for the land, colorful and picturesque. This is some of the finest fishing and hunting country in the world. Lake Pend Oreille, alone, has 14 varieties of game fish.

There are no poisonous snakes in Bonner county. Earthquakes, tornadoes, droughts and severe temperature extremes are unknown.

IDAHO LAUDED

Boise — Idaho receives sturdy recognition in the latest publication of "My Ten Favorite Trips in North America" by renowned world traveler George Pierrot, travel editor guest of the State of Idaho an several occasions. In announcing Idaho's inclusion in the 1966 edition, Louise Shaddock, head of Idaho's Department of Commerce and Development, commented that George Pierrot is the only man in the world with nine hours of sponsored TV in color on travel, weekly. He has traveled across of countries and still thinks the Pacific Northwest is the greatest country in the world for travel.

Pierrot pays tribute to the northern section of Idaho around St. Maries and the St. Joe River; Hells Canyon country and the virgin wilderness of the Middle Fork of the Salmon River.
