DEBARKER IN USE BY GEM STATE LBR.

The new Beloit Debarker went into operation Monday at the Gem State Lumber Co. mill at Juliaetta, with satisfactory results.

For the present, the logs are put into position by means of a lift truck. The log travels on an "in feed" chain to the debarker. As the log passes lengthwise through the machine, five "spring loaded" tools remove the bark, which is actually rubbed from the log, not peeled, cut or scraped. The tools are made of fabricated steel and have a "hard faced" surface.

As the log leaves the debarker, it continues onto the "out feed" chain and is stopped at a point where it is cut into 16-foot lengths. This cutting is done by means of a vertical 5-foot bar and chain that is "lowered to the log," after which it returns to its original position.

The log then travels for a few more feet, where it is in position to be placed on the "live deck." From this point it moves into the mill proper and onto the carriage, where it is sawed.

The debarker was purchased from the Beloit Corp. of Birmingham, Alabama, and the large bar and chain was built by the Northwest Marine Iron Works at Portland, Ore.

4-H SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE

Chicago, Special — Two college scholarships of $800 each will be awarded this year to two present or former 4-H members by Chevron Chemical Co., Otho Division, San Francisco.

This marks Chevron's 10th anniversary as an active supporter of 4-H Club work.

Applicants for the two scholarships must be enrolled in their college sophomore or junior year in agriculture in the fall of 1966. They must plan to major in agronomy, soils, entomology, floriculture, plant pathology, horticulture (vegetable or fruit) or ornamental horticulture.

Candidates must also complete a special 4-H scholarship application form and submit a copy of college freshman and sophomore scholastic records signed by the college registrar.

Winners will be chosen by the Co-operative Extension Service, which supervises the scholarship program.

WEATHER CHILLS, LITTLE RAIN FALLS

Last Wednesday, Thursday and Friday were as beautiful fall days as anyone could wish, with day-time temperatures in the mid-70's, and at night dropping into the high 50's.

Saturday saw a bit of chill creeping into the air as clouds filled up in the west, and Saturday night a "spotty rain" fell, hitting some sections with almost an inch, and in others "there wasn't enough to lay the dust."

Sunday afternoon the skies began to clear, and Sunday night a low of 38 degrees was recorded here, but no frost. On top some of the ridges there was frost, in some areas said to be killing, but in others "just white."

Farmers, loggers and fire fighters really welcomed what rain there was, but a "good, old-fashioned soaker" is still badly needed.

HOW TO GAIN WEIGHT

In Project Weight Watch, a nutrition education program currently sponsored by the National Dairy Council and its affiliated units, the major emphasis is on overweight and quite rightly so. No one knows exactly how many thousands tons of excess weight is being lugged around by our fellow Americans, but it is plenty.

The other side of the coin is that a very considerable percentage of our people have exactly the opposite problem. Here is an example:
"Dear Dr. Bauer: I would appreciate very much sometime if you might write an article pertaining to gaining weight — as to daily menus and snacks. I am very thin and with little strength due to extreme underweight and a low calcium..."

A Real Problem
This lady has a real problem, as do her five-by-five friends. It is often as difficult to gain weight as it is to lose; perhaps even more so. And it is small consolation to these people to tell them the old proverb about "a lean horse for a long race." They are likely to reply as did one patient, "The way I feel, why should I want to live that long!"

Underweight is not always a matter of diet alone. Heredity may play a part, giving the individual a body structure tending toward the lean rather than the stocky. This has advantages if it is not too extreme, since it does make a person less liable to diabetes, heart diseases, and other complications of the overweight. On the other hand, excessive thinness may be accompanied by low blood pressure, lack of energy, diminished strength and endurance, and susceptibility to cold, infections and tuberculosis.

The first step toward overcoming underweight is a thorough medical investigation to be sure that there is no disease or abnormality which is keeping the weight down. In order to gain, it is essential to be "free to gain."

Kinds Of Food Needed
Diet cannot be prescribed in detail, since tastes differ and so do food tolerances. Prescribed menus tend to limit the diet. Understanding the kinds of foods that can help one gain weight is better.

Here's a procedure you can follow:

1. try to eat more; if necessary eat more often;
2. eat more of the foods that furnish more calories in small bulk, butter, cheese, meat, eggs, sweets, chocolate, cream; also consider foods such as salad oils, peanut butter, olives, avocados, nuts, and starches including pastries, breads, rolls, pies, dried beans and peas, potatoes, and thick soups;
3. reduce activity; sit more and stand less, ride more and walk less;
4. whenever possible, rest or nap after eating.

Of course, in choosing your foods, be sure to include the necessary variety from the four food groups.

Let your physician prescribe and limit graduated exercise as your strength and weight improve.

ALASKA ONCE SUB-TROPIC SAYS PROF.

U. of I. Moscow. - The barren northern Arctic regions of Alaska once supported sub-tropical life, according to Dr. Charles J. Smiley, professor of geology at the University of Idaho.

Dr. Smiley, a paleontologist, has been conducting research in the Arctic region near Point Barrow, Alaska for the past four summers as a member of the Arctic Institute, Office of Naval Research. He has been studying forms of life existing in geological periods dating back more than 175-million years.

The layered fossil remains found on Alaska coastal plains contained evidence of large tree ferns, and palm like trees associated with the age of dinosaurs, more than 130-million years ago. Dr. Smiley said it was unusual that no remains of animal life were found. The region at that time was temperate, humid, and warm, and not unlike today's humid coastal areas in the southeastern U. S.

About 75 to 80-million years ago the subtropical vegetation began to die out. Dr. Smiley attributes this to genetic old age and a change in world climate. The area was gradually replaced by a redwood like tree, swampy cypress, such as found in Florida, and flowering plants. It is Smiley's theory that vegetation from lower latitudes advanced north.

Some scientists have suggested that the earth's axis tipped, or that continents shifted, and provided warmer growing conditions in the north. Dr. Smiley does not agree with these theories. He said that evidence of identical subtropical plant life along the 70th parallel has been duplicated in Russia and northern Europe.

The Arctic, as we know it today, is the product of a changing world climate brought about by geologic development. According to Dr. Smiley the development of the Rocky Mountains, and its northern extension, the Brooks Range, along with other world volcanic continental development, reshaped ocean boundaries and landscapes. This greatly affected world weather systems. He bases this conclusion on the layering of volcanic dust and ocean deposits at various geologic time levels in Alaska.

Dr. Smiley said the world has experienced three "Ice Ages," 750, 250, and one-million years ago. He said we are now in a post glacial period of cold weather, but the world is going to get warmer, and perhaps within a few million years the Arctic life zones will once again evolve a different form of life. Flora and fauna found at lower moderate latitudes will advance north, according to Dr. Smiley.

World weather will be modified by the erosion of mountain barriers, and a raising sea level. Naval scientists have calculated that if the Antarctic ice cap were to melt the world's oceans would rise 250 feet.

Dr. Smiley said the next 125-million years will see a return to more normal world climate, as is shown in the Alaska deposits.

NEW IDEA BE USED IN LIVESTOCK SHOW

A first-time exhibit at the 56th Pacific International Livestock Exposition in north Portland Oct. 14-22 is geared to the young set.

It is a "see and touch barnyard" where children may pet, feed and fondle chicks, rabbits, calves, lambs, goats, piglets and ponies. There even will be cows so that the small ones can have a squirt or two from the milking department. Bottles for calf feeding, and packaged pellet food for other animals will be available to the venturesome.

No-touch pens will hold a mama pig and her litter, a Percheron mare and colts, and Shetland ponies and their babies. This is so that children can compare the size of the animals and their young.

NEW WINTER FEED BARLEY APPROVED

U. of I. Moscow — A new, high yielding winter feed barley variety adapted to northern Idaho and eastern Washington has been approved for release in the two states, Dr. A. M. Finley, head of the University of Idaho Department of Plant Sciences, announced today.

The new variety, named Luther, averaged more than 100 bushels per acre in yield trials in this area's 20 to 25 inch rainfall zone, Finley said.

This is 5 to 15 bushels higher than the common winter feed barley varieties, Alpine, White Winter and Hudson.

Luther is also shorter and has a stronger straw than the other varieties. It does not lodge even under heavy fertilization.

A mutant or sport of Alpine barley, Luther was created with the help of a chemical mutagen, diethyl sulfate, a material which induces permanent gene changes. It was developed by Dr. R. A. Nilan and Carl Muir, Washington State barley breeders, and was named in honor of the late Dr. Luther Smith, WSU plant geneticist from 1946 to 1952.

Seed of the new variety will not be generally available until the fall of 1967. About 16,000 pounds of foundation seed is being distributed this fall to certified seed growers, primarily in Washington, Finley said. Small amounts of both breeder's and foundation seed have been planted at the university's plant science farm at Moscow.

LIFE LINES USED

A person's future can be foretold to some extent in the lines and creases of his hand. Medical scientists are reading palms to study heart disease and birth defects. Crease patterns formed during the first three months of pregnancy remain unchanged through a person's life. The palm prints of most normal, healthy infants are similar. Reports the American Medical Association, and deviations from these normal patterns may give clues to disease and its cause.

WATER CARVES A HUGE IDAHO CAVE

Boise - Thousands of years ago percolating underground water in the southeast corner of Idaho dissolved limestone along strong fracture planes, hollowing out Minnetonka Cave, a half mile long. Water from rain and melting snow entered the ground and absorbed carbon dioxide from the air and decaying plant materials. This solution of carbon dioxide in water traveled along cracks in the limestone caused by earthquakes and settling, moving down into the earth, dissolving the limestone and leaving an insoluble clay. Sand and pebbles were also left and subsequent stream action has knocked off the edges and corners, rounding and polishing the hard quartzite material.

The cave was discovered in 1906 by Edward Arnell of St. Charles, Idaho, as he was hunting for camp meat. He shot a grouse which fell near the small opening to the cave, and as he retrieved it he felt a cool breeze blowing from the hole. The next day he and several others, with the use of lanterns, made the first exploration of the cavern, and in which they found intriguing stalactites, stalagmites and helictites.

The cave is divided into nine natural rooms, the largest of which is about 300 feet in diameter and 90 feet high. The Indian name Minnetonka, meaning "falling waters," was given to the cave because of the considerable water seeping from the ceiling in the continual mutation of the cave formations. Minnetonka is located near the Utah-Idaho border about 12 miles west from Bear Lake, near the head of St. Charles Canyon, nine miles west of St. Charles, Idaho. It was first developed in 1938 when a trail from the St. Charles Canyon road to the entrance of the cave was constructed. Interior paths, steps and railings were installed by the government. Today the U. S. Forest Service has

If anyone has any doubt that this is an election year - all they have to do is stand and watch a few minutes on Kendrick's Main Street. Cars filled with "hand shakers" and bearing bumper and other signs are to be seen coming and going - and political cards are everywhere. There is one thing to be said - most of the "hand shakers" are never seen except when they come up for election!

DIABOLICAL

"Why is your car painted blue on one side and red on the other?" Hot Rodder: "It's a terrific scheme. You should hear the wittnesses contradict each other!"
