CATTLE GRUBS CAN BE CONTROLLED

Moscow - Cattle grubs can be controlled with systematic chemicals, says Leonard Busis, Latah County Agricultural agent. The time to take action, he advises, is in the fall before the damage is done.

The grubs are produced by the "heel fly," a pest that causes cattle to run in nervous irritation during the summer. The fly lays it eggs on livestock. Grubs burrow into the skin. When they come out in late winter they make holes in the hide. Damage caused by the grubs --- also known as the warbles — is a serious loss to the industry every year.

Chemicals used in the fall help to reduce the damage by killing the grubs in the animal's system. Some of the chemicals also control lice. A few lice that survive the summer are often found in ears, tail switch, and on bellies of stock As the weather gets cooler they increase Several generations develop in a winter and an entire herd may be infested from a few animals. Gains are often reduced because animals are disturbed. They spend a good deal of time rubbing against posts, buildings and trees

The county agent had a word of caution: Some chemicals cannot be used on milking dairy stock because of residue problems. Lists of suit-able materials and available at the county agent's office.
