COHO SALMON LIMITED SUCCESS

By Stuart Murrell, Regional Conservation Educator

Boise -- The Coho salmon introduced into the South Fork of the Clearwater River have had limited success in developing a run of fish in Idaho, according to Terry Holubetz, Regional Fish Biologist. Since 1963, a total of almost 11 million eggs have been planted in Red River and Crooked River hatching channels on the South Fork of the Clearwater. A few fish returned to Idaho beginning in 1965, and this year's run to date is 325 counted over the Lewiston Dam. Since these are fall run fish this count is almost complete for the year. The eggs for these plants come from various lower Columbia River tributaries and were furnished Idaho by the U. S. Bureau of Commercial Fisheries.

Even though we have had Coho returning to Idaho it is difficult to discover if they were successfully spawning in the South Fork. For the first time this year, 11 Coho were observed spawning in Three Mile Creek, which is a tributary to the South Fork of the Clearwater near Stites. The reason for their selecting a stream at a lower elevation and about 60 miles downstream for their hatching area is unknown.

However, there are two possibilities. The small fry could have drifted down to Three Mile Creek after hatching at Red River and remained there during their stay in fresh water because the creek is cooler than the main South Fork during the summer months. Springs in this creek keep it cooler in summer and warmer in winter. The other possibility is that the adult fish found Three Mile Creek to have warmer spawning temperatures in late fall and selected it for this reason. The cold water temperatures in Idaho's high country in late fall have created a spawning problem for these fish, since many of the small creeks they prefer are ice covered in November.

The Coho, or Silver as it is called by many people, is not normally a fish that runs long distances to spawn in fresh water. Most of the

KUID T. V. TO INCREASE COLOR PROGRAMMING

KUID-TV, University of Idaho educational station, will increase its color program from two to twelve hours a week beginning January 5, Peter Haggart, program director, said today.

Color programs will be seen between 8-10 p. m., Sunday through Thursday. "American Telegraph and Telephone has given educational television a special line rate which allows us to present live color programs covering cultural subjects and current affairs of immediate interest," Haggart said.

Educational Television Service, Na-

runs on the coast are on streams of less than 100 miles in length. Therefore, the 500 mile plus runs into Idaho are unusual. These fish enter the Columbia River in late August and early September and arrive at their spawning beds in Idaho sometime in November. They spawn immediately and the eggs remain in the gravel over winter, hatching the following spring. After 1 1/2 to 2 years in fresh water they migrate to the ocean, being about 4 to 5 inches long. Coho return after two years in the ocean and average about 8 pounds in weight. They are a sporting fish when caught in the ocean and upon first entering the Columbia, preferring to jump rather than fight deep. They are difficult to catch after they have been in fresh water for some time.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game have released Coho in 14 bodies of water in southern Idaho in an attempt to get them established in fresh water similar to a recent introduction in the Great Lakes. This program began three years ago and they have provided a good fishery the first year, growing from about three inches to 10 or 12 inches. However, after they reach a year old the urge to migrate takes over and they head out downriver. As a result of this, people have caught silvers in the main Snake River and even in irrigation ditches near Pocatello. It was hoped they would remain in the lakes or reservoirs and feed on the abundant rough fish available, but they have not done this. The Department plans to continue this program as long as the surplus eggs are available from the Oregon hatcheries.

tional Education Television and regional networks that have banded together under NET will produce the specials, some of which are to be funded by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

A half-hour program to be shown weekly is "Washington Week in Review. Four Washington correspondents analyze key issues behind the headlines. Another is "The National Theatre of the Deaf," an hour of selections. Included are poetry and the comedy "Gianni Schicchi" from the repertory of this virtuous troupe of professional actors, who, though deaf themselves, perform expressively for hearing audiences as well.

FARMERS DOING REAL FOOD JOB

U. of I., Moscow — Farmers are doing a better job every year in supplying food for an increasing population. Homer Putter, county agricultural agent, comments, and there are reasons to recognize the importance of farming throughout the year.
Recent reports by the Department of Agriculture show that one farm worker in the United States provides food for himself and more than 42 others. The ratio has advanced sharply in the technological age. It is estimated that 100 million more Americans will be added to the population by the end of the century. Through combined efforts of agriculture and allied industries it is expected that the challenge of feeding and clothing can then be met.
Farmers and ranchers today look to machinery for production of power. Fewer farmers cultivate more acres. However, the number of hired farm workers in the United States increased 11 percent in 1967, reversing a long trend. There were more than three million hired workers in 1967, compared with 2,800,000 the year before.
A smaller percentage of family income is spent on food today than 10 years ago, economists report. It is estimated at about 17 percent for 1968, compared to more than 24 percent in 1958.
A good way for the average family to make its food budget even more efficient, suggests Esther Williams, extension nutritionist, is to plan the menus before shopping, making sure that each member of the family receives each day at least two servings of meat, poultry, fish or eggs; two servings of milk or dairy products (more for children), four servings of bread and cereals, and four servings of fruit and vegetables.

Milk is not as perishable as has generally been believed. Recent laboratory research by the department of agriculture indicates that low temperatures can make it last a long time in palatable condition.
Under household refrigeration—45 to 50 degrees—milk keeps about 7 days. But tests show that reducing the temperature to freezing or just slightly above will prolong the storage life as long as seven weeks. The report of the research was received this week by the county home economics agent.
Long-accepted ideas about milk perishability, the report said, were in for even more of a jolt when research showed that milk pasteurized under higher than normal temperatures would keep as long as 20 weeks. The investigation was conducted by the agricultural research service and a commercial milk company. Both winter and summer milks were pasteurized under normal conditions—165 to 172 degrees for 16 seconds—at several Southern dairies. Then they were cooled to 32 degrees and flown to Illinois where they were stored at 32, 35, 40, and 45 degrees. Weekly bacteria tests and evaluations by a taste panel indicated that at the two lowest storage temperatures some of the summer milks were still safe and flavorful after seven weeks, and the winter milks after four weeks.
Scientists then tried higher temperatures. They pasteurized milk at 200 and 220 degrees for the usual 15 seconds. They also tried flash-pasteurization at these temperatures for half a second. The milk samples were stored at the same temperatures as before and tested regularly. Only the samples pasteurized at 220 degrees for 16 seconds were still acceptable after 13 to 20 weeks of storage at 32 degrees.
The ultra-high pasteurization temperature did not destroy milk flavor. With fresh milk for comparison, the panel tasted samples each week. They detected a cooked flavor immediately after pasteurizing, but within the first week of storage the off-flavor disappeared.

EMPLOYMENT ROSE BECAUSE OF SNOW

Heavy snows clogging up sidewalks and driveways and threatening to cave in roofs throughout the city of Moscow, resulted in the Moscow Employment Office doing a rush business in snow shovelers during the week just passed. Frank J. Hartstein, Manager of the Moscow office of the Idaho Department of Employment, reported that his office received and filled calls for about 20 snow shovelers during the last two days of the week, and they also handled many more over the telephone and were too pressed for time to make records of all their activities. Hartstein said that many high school and some college youth were making back-to-school money by removing the "white snuff" for local residents.

Other types of jobs were also filled during the week, with a total of 27 workers being placed in jobs. During the previous week, there were 7 workers given job finding help, and during the first week of 1969, the total was 16. At the end of the week there were 41 jobs still open, including a few for snow shoveling, compared with 40 jobs available last weekend, and 31 opening on hand at the same time a year ago.

A total of 41 persons filed new claims for unemployment insurance during the week, bringing the total number of workers seeking jobs pay to 230 at the end of the week. This is an increase from the 194 who were seeking benefits last week, and from the 207 persons who were filing claims a year ago. In the immediate Moscow area, the total jumped from 92 a week ago to the current 107, and compares with only 76 persons filing claims a year ago. In the Genesee area, the current total is 13, last week it was 11, and last year 4. Sixty-four persons are seeking jobs pay from the Troy-Deary-Bovill area, compared with 51 last week and 76 last year. At Kendrick there are new 13, last week 11, and last year 9. Twenty-six checks are going into the Potlatch area, last week there
