FOREST MANAGEMENT

Timber is a crop and like other crops it must be carefully managed. The founders of PFI, foreseeing the increased demand for forest products: for a growing population, initiated a far reaching program of forest management including protection, culture, harvesting, new product development, marketing and research.

Good forest management not only assures continued delivery of goods and materials the trees provide, but includes all the other forest bounties: recreation, wildlife, forage, soil, water and minerals . . . and it carries the responsibility to deal with the hazards of insects and disease and the ravages of fire. And it all comes under the heading of Multiple Use Forest Management.

The Potlatch Plan for good Multiple Use Forest Management means that PFI will continue to honor its nation-wide guardianship of over a million acres of growing trees so they will provide an everlasting source of products and jobs, recreation and wildlife, water and soil . . . and it is achieved by this equation: Conservation plus Protection equals Perpetual Harvestl
