PUT THE GOOD WEATHER TO WORK-FERTILIZE IN THE FALL

You're going to be busy as a bird dog next spring, right? So why not apply our Orthro Unipel 27-12-0 Fertilizer this fall. It' especially recommended for hay and pasture fertilization in this area and you'll enjoy these other benefits:

1. The product is in good supply now. Available in bag or bulk. You avoid that "sold out" situation that sometimes occurs in the spring.

2. You'll be fertilizing at a time when you have the time. Not during the spring rush. 3. You eliminate the problem of going into the fields in the spring when they may be soft and wet.

You avoid unnecessary soil compaction.

There are other advantages to fertilizing in the fall and we'd appreciate the chanec to discuss them with you.

Hope you'll come in for a chat.

expected to take over a week. Steel beams were hauled in last week and will soon be assembled to replace the main bridge at the Park. The bridge has been used "at your own risk" since it was condemned

PUT THE GOOD WEATHER TO WORK-FERTILIZE IN THE FALL

You're going to be busy as a bird dog next spring, right? So why not apply our Orthro Unipel 27-12-0 Fertilizer this fall. It' especially recommended for hay and pasture fertilization in this area and you'll enjoy these other benefits:

1. The product is in good supply now. Available in bag or bulk. You avoid that "sold out" situation that sometimes occurs in the spring.

2. You'll be fertilizing at a time when you have the time. Not during the spring rush.

3. You eliminate the problem of going into the fields in the spring when they may be soft and wet.

You avoid unnecessary soil compaction.

There are other advantages to fertilizing in the fall and we'd appreciate the chanec to discuss them with you.

Hope you'll come in for a chat.

In All of Unit 17

Hunters planning to get their elk and deer in the Upper Selway region (Unit 17) are asked by the Idaho Fish and Game Department to disregard the brown shading on the lower two-thirds of the unit as it appears on the big game map printed on the back cover of the 1972 pamphlet of hunting seasons and regulations.

This is an error. There should be no shaded area in Unit 17 this year because season dates are the same for both elk and deer-September 16-November 26 and uniform in all parts of Unit 17.

The brown shading, which last year indicated a closing date different from the unshaded portion, erroneously carried over to the 1972 game map, where it signifies nothing. Just ignore the shaded area in Unit 17 even though it won't go away.

Be Careful In Preparing Poultry

Be careful in selecting, storing and cooking poultry, warns Mrs. Joanne Anderson, extension Home Economist University of Idaho.

Poultry loses quality when not frozen, Mrs. Anderson explains. Even when frozen, it keeps best at zero degrees fahrenheit. Take poultry only from refrigerator or freezer cases. If you buy poultry already frozen, make sure it is still frozen when you select it. Check the package to avoid torn or incomplete wrappers. Torn wrapping allows rapid loss of poultry quality and increase the chance of bacteria contamination, Mrs. Anderson points out.

Once you have bought the poultry, freeze it immediately or use it within 25 hours. This keeps quality loss and bacteria contamination at a minimum. It's usually a good idea to repack the meat before freezing it. suggests Mrs. Anderson. Store wrapping is not always moisture, vapor proof which it should be to keep poultry best.

Be especially careful to cook the bird all at one time, Mrs. Anderson warns. Don't cook it partially one day and finish cooking it the next. That gives bacteria more time to contaminate the meat. Once poultry has been cooked and seved, refreeze the unused portion. Leftovers which will be eaten within a day or two can safely be left in the refrigerator.

A good rule to remember, Mrs. Anderson concludes, is never leave raw or cooked poultry out of the reingerator or freezer any longer than necessary. A maximum is two to four
