Present day economics, however, often dictate that clean farming and isophisticated agriculture be the rule in order to survive financially. Clean farming sometimes is carried to the point of plowing up ditch banks and hurning off fence rows, leaving very little cover available during the win-ter. This reduction in cover affects not only pheasants, but song birds, rabbits and other wildlife.

SUPPLEMETAL READING

The school board members visited our school last Tuesday, Nov. 26. From my own point-of-view this visit was a very worthwhile and positive thing. It was not only informative for the board members as well as the teachers, but it was of great value for strengthening the bond of communication and good will. Thank you, board members, for your time. Last week was a very short week to we have not done anything new since our last article. Everyone has continued working hard and some progress is being made. Some stu-dents are quite inconsistent; they will do very well one day and be very low the next. As long as the over-all trend of their charts is progressive we try not to be discouraged. Just continued like they were cooking a gournet dinner. In social studies we are still study-history of the United States. In Spelling Nov. 16, 1974, we had a 50-word spelling test; it was fun. Reporter—Bronwyn Manfull since our last article. Everyone has our part in the Christmas program. We think this is going to be fun. Some of us are into stories in reading, and we are all continuing work with our phonetic sounds. Our math is becoming more difficult, but is fun since we have the use of some plastic counters to help us. We hope our visitors Tuesday of last week enjoyed our classroom; we liked having them come. Sixth Grade

This Thursday we're having an as-sembly. We don't know what it's about.

Now-to get into our subjects. In Math we're moving right along. In Language we're on page 56-60. In Soc. Studies we're learning about different kinds of spheres.

In Spelling we're on unit 12. In Health we're on chapter 3. In science we're going to have a test on the kinds of clouds, atmosphere and precipitation.

By the way, Gina Whitinger and Darren Clemenhagen are going to get to go up to Moscow to compete against other schools in the hoop shoot.
