How to Beat the Cold

THE WASHINGTON WATER POWER COMPANY

In this land west of the Rockies the pioneer soon learned that the winter cold could kill him. Caught in a blizzard and the numbing cold that followed, he could have real problems. Jerky and hardtack from the saddlebags could keep him fed, but shelter was a must and great ingenuity was often displayed by those who survived. A snow cave at the roots of a deadiali saved more than one. It's still man against the cold. Basically our modern homes are just a barrier between our warm bodies and the blasts of winter, ingenuity is still required to make that barrier leak proof.

Your heat specialists at The Washington Water Power Company know most of the tricks about keeping the heat inside your home rather than, wasting it away through cracks, gaps and thin walls. For your comfort and in the interest of saving precious energy, we'd be happy to advise you.
