Kendrick has been fortunate in having such a local institution. It is now a common sight to see Troy and Moscow people come in on the 12:49 train, make purchases of butter, groceries and other items and then board the 4:13 for their home, with their arms loaded. Carloads of Lewiston residents are now familiar sights, bent on the same errand.

Two new pupils are enrolled in the primary room, Kathryn Ann Abrams of Bremerton, Wa., and Jack Dillon, who came from Lewiston.

Monuments should be raised to the frontier doctor. He battled every ailment of mankind, many of which he could not even name. He treated the dreadful injuries common to the fierce environment. He performed miracles and agonized at his inability to do more. His main aids were his own courage and resourcefulness and the meager contents of his black bag. Constant overwork and exposure often led him to his own early grave. Surely that work-worn doctor would be grati-

Growth and development made it possible; money for hospitals, laboratories, and medical schools, energy to run the communities and build healthy economies.

An impending energy shortage is now threatening the economic health of our nation and, indeed, the whole world. As a utility, we recognize our responsibility to supply this energy. Power plants have been designed and proposed, but are being blocked or delayed by strong opposing forces.

As in matters of public health, the well-being of the people is at stake. The understanding and support of the public is urgently needed now to avert an energy crisis.
