Ul President Discusses Up-coming Legislative Session

Moscow-An 8 percent increase in appropriations for the UI next year would enable the state's land grant university to operate next year about as well as it did this year, UI Pres-ident Richard Gibb said in a press conference Tuesday, Dec. 11.

"And we didn't operate very well this year," he said, pointing to the university's having to cut 110 positions and close an agriculture experiment station in Sandpoint, due in part to repercussions of the one per-cent property tax limitation initia-

Gibb said he's heard rumblings from around the state that the legislature will try to give the universi-nesee Couldn't support asking the State

The Board of Education/Board of Regents for college status for the UI Department of Arts and Architecture at this time, even though proponents of the proposal for the new college contend that the status change won't cost the university extra money.
"Even if it didn't cost us another dollar to give this department college status, I couldn't go to the board with the proposal because I haven't been convinced of the benefits to the university as a whole of changing its status. I would like to hold off on this proposal for awhile," Gibb

Calling himself a "staunch advocate" of students' evaluations to teachers, Gibb said he also wouldn't apgents with a proposal to revise stu-dent evaluations of teachers which might weaken the effectiveness of the evaluations. Last week, the Faculty Council approved a revision of the student evaluation policy which would end the required use of a standard evaluation form universitywide, and there would be no centralized tabulation of the results of the proposal. Gibb said he advocates use of student evaluations in decisions on salaries, promotion and ten-

Gibb, who said he has the power to amend the policy voted on by the Faculty Council will look at the policy again with the committee which has been working on it before he is ready to take it to the Board of Regents.

The board at its last meeting called for a review of its policy on tenure which it established in 1974.

"It doesn't mean the board wants to do away with tenure or take tenure away from anyone. It's just a five-year review, which was written into the original policy to see if there are ways we can improve the policy," Gibb said.

"Our purpose is to consider what kinds of programs and policies will help share the kind of agriculture we'll need and the kind of rural life want in the decades ahead,'

The USDA chief challenged witnesses to "avoid mouthing the old, too-familiar slogans." What was needed, he said was "original suggestions that will help us determine whether the policy behind our pres-

Whooping Crane Carries Experimental Transmitter By Hugh Wilson

Dept. of Fish and Game Ray, the whooping crane is carrying an electronic gadget this winter that may help save him and his kin from extinction. The 4-month-old bird started his first migration south last month from Grays Lake National Wildlife Refuge in southeastern Idaho with an experimental 2-ounce transmitter attached to his leg to enable resear-chers to follow Ray on his 750-mile flight to wintering grounds in New Mexico.

Those involved in the tracking project, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Audubon Society, believe the radio will give them information about habitat use and the effects of accidents and human disturbance.

Such data, they say, will strengthen chances for the comeback of a species that numbered less than two dozen in 1941.

Ray, who got the name along with the transmitter was one of eight juvenile whooping cranes in this year's start a new flock.

Whooping crane eggs for the Gray Lake project are transported from nests of a wild flock in Canada's Wood Buffalo Park and from a U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service research center in Laurel, Maryland.

At Grays Lake, the eggs are placed in the nests of sandhill cranes, who serve as foster parents.

A tracking plane following Ray and his sandhill cranes after they took off found the birds' flight pattern to be a model of consistency. During the first leg of the migration 498 miles from Grays Lake to the Monte Vista National Wildlife Refuge in Colorado, radio signals from Ray showed the family was traveling an average of 166 miles for each of three days.

Trackers found that they would take off about noon, fly at altitudes from 7500 feet to as high as 12,000 feet over the Rocky Mountains and settle to roost just before sundown. Ray and 4 other young birds were fitted with transmitters this year and one of the five was killed, apparently by a golden eagle. Before the eagle attack, there were 17 whooping cranes reported in the Grays Lake flock.

There were 115 whoopers now counted in three flocks, including Grays Lake. In 1941 the whooping crane population totaled 21, according to he Fish and Game Service.

Adult males standing about four feet tall, are among the largest native birds on the North American continent. Their plumage is crimson brown, with pure white wings tipped with black that can have a spread of monstrations at 9 a. m. each Monday, Wednesday and Friday of the semester and two laboratory sections, one meeting from 1:10 to 3 p. m. and one from 3:10 to 5 p. m. each Wednesday. It is offered for 3 hours credit. Ristow said plans aren't complete yet, but field trips will play an important part and may include trips to such installations. to such installations as Dworshak Dam and solar homes as well as to some experimental low head hydro and methane generation equipment on campus. If enough students are interested, arrangements may be made for a longer trip to southwest Washington where several wind generation installments may be seen as well as facilities at Grand Coulee Dam.

Students may also write an in-depth research report including information on socio-economic implications of alternative energy forms or make a project in the lab session.

For more information, contact either John Ristow or James Cassetto at UI industrial Education 885-6492. Students should be prepared to register during regular spring semester registration.

The David Johnson family, Lewiston, enjoyed lunch in the Lawrence Heimgartner home. That same evening Ronnie Renfrow and Allen Heimgartner visited Ray and had supper with the family. On Sunday evening Lawrence and Nell were sup-per guests of Janice, Dick and Mari-lou Groseclose in Juliaetta.

Minnie and Andy Cox and their son Tom, entertained other family members at their home for a pre-Christmas dinner on Sunday. Those present were Tom, Peg and Pat Neal, Stephanie and Wayne Pederson all of Moscow and David and Crystal Neal who are now living in the Edd Roy and Mabel Glenn dropped in at the Cox home to wish Andy a Happy Birthday and enjoyed a pancake sup-

Wayne and Phebe Davis were in Kendrick Monday to attend a "Pioneers of the Potlatch" senior citizens Christmas dinner party at the Sr. Center. The crowd was large, the dinner bountiful and good but the musical program was devine. Inez Armitage so generously provided her organ and music for carols and accordance of the company of t companied Stephen Young, the HS music instructor as he so stirringly sang "The Lord's Prayer".

Vicky and Dick Benscoter visited Karen Gold and her family in Lewiston Thursday afternoon, That same evening they enjoyed dinner in the Larry Galloway home and later attended the Winter Concert at the Jennifer Jr. HS. Granddaughter Kari Galloway is a member of the band at Jennifer. It proved to be a very enjoyable evening.

May I take this opportunity to wish each and everyone of our friends and neighbors a very Happy and Blessed Christmas. We are so fortunate to live in this country where we are able to celebrate this Holy Season in our own way. Jo Benscoter

Dear Santa Claus:

This year I have a special wish. I have no real need for a pretty bowl

Please don't bring me pies to bake. Don't leave eggs for some fancy cake Don't leave me a broom to sweep the floor.

There are a few things more:

Don't bring me a mop
Or a recipe to flop.
Don't bring us a big ol' ham
And a bushel of fruit for jam.
Turkey, duck or goose we have no

Please don't bring us anything live Don't bring sheets and pillows for the bed.

Ol' Santa remember what I've said. I really don't want anything in black. I'd just have to give it back. I don't desire anything in shades of

Or anything too fat or too lean.
I don't want tape, string, or glue,
Or anything in shades of blue. If I'm too tough to please, ol' Dear, Just save something for next year, There is something we really want, you know? We want to see love and kindness to show. I'd like to see the Wold's Wars cease,

For people everywhere to show happiness, love and peace.
Wouldn't you like to hear that the hostages are free? We all know America is where they want to be. So, Santa, remember each mother and Dad Help them recall better Christmases they've had. As you and the reindeer fly about the sky, Keep in raind each tear in every eye. It doesn't matter if we have snow.

The very best gift you could give this year Is to hold each and every family together without fear.

If only you can help those hostages in their plight. Now, Ol' Santa, you have yourself a very nice night.

After you've delivered all those toys, To every good girl and boy, May everyone share your joy.

May your boots stay shiny and bright. 5 May plenty of cookies be left for you on your flight.

May the reindeer have plenty of hay, Especially Rudolph who lights the way. We send you and your misses all our love.

May the whole world enjoy Peace and Joy from God above.
