Airborne Particulate Matter Exceeds EPA Safety Standards

Moscow—The amount of airborne particulate matter in the atmosphere here 5 days after a dusting of volcanic ash from Mt. St. Helens still exceeds Environmental Protection Agency safety standards by more than five times, a University of Idaho scientist said Friday.

Although levels of airborne particulates dropped Thursday and Friday following a rainstorm, which deposited a quarter inch of rain here, Dr. Sherry Farwell, UI associate professor of chemistry, said one rainstorm will probably not provide total relief from airborne ash.

From Monday to Thursday morning, a series of samples collected by Farwell showed that levels of atmospheric particulates exceed the EPA's recommended safety level by 15 to 35 times.

A sample collected between 10 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Thursday however, indicated there were 1,200 micrograms of particulates per cubic meter of air or a significant decline from a sample taken Wednesday evening and Thursday morning which collected over 5,000 micrograms per cubic meter.

A sample taken between Thursday evening and Friday morning collected 1,400 micrograms of particulates, Farwell said, and may indicate airborne particulate levels will again rise as the area dries out following the rain.

Even more alarming than the quantity of the airborne particulates he measured, Farwell said, is that the kind of air-sampling equipment he used collected only very small sized particles which are known to enter the human respiratory system deep into the lungs.

One encouraging bit of information gleaned from his research following the rainstorm, however, indicated that the smallest and most potentially detrimental size of particulates seemed to have been removed from the air, he said.

The EPA standards also include a much larger size range of particles, including sizes commonly filtered out by the nose which fail to reach internal respiratory tract structures.

Farwell used a recently developed air sampler designed to monitor airborne particles in the 1 to 15 micron range and even down to one-hundredth micron in size. The EPA standard take into account particles up to 100 microns in size. A micron is one-thousandth of a millimeter.

Only particles 15 microns or less, however, are thought to be capable of entering the human respiratory system, Farwell said.

While particles from 2.5 to 15 microns are thought to be removed from the respiratory system in a relatively short time of about a day, Farwell said, the particles smaller than 2.5 microns might take weeks, months or years to be removed and may result in lung damage in some people.

Although some apparently conflicting figures have appeared in the press from UI and WSU sources, Farwell said the WSU samples show only the amount of very small particles under one micron in size and should be smaller than UI samples.

The EPA standards recommend that exposures to airborne particles matter not exceed 260 micrograms per cubic meter of air in a 24-hour period. On Monday, Farwell's equipment collected about 7,500 micrograms in about 10 hours.

From late Monday evening to Tuesday morning another sample collected about 3,800 micrograms. Tuesday morning to evening, the equipment collected about 9,200 micrograms or 35 times the standards.

Tuesday night, Farwell collected about 3,500 micrograms to arrive at the lowest of airborne particulates yet documented since the eruption, which still exceeds EPA recommended levels by 13.5 times.

Wed., Farwell collected about 7,700 micrograms. Wednesday evening to Thursday morning, the machine collected over 5,000 micrograms.

Farwell added that it may take months for the particulate levels to drop to pre-eruption levels. He called the popular notion that rainfall "cleanses" the air a misconception at best.

"Most of the time people think a rainstorm cleans the air because the air smells better after a rainstorm. But what really happens is that the storm just replaces a contaminated air mass with a fresh air mass from someplace else," Farwell said.

"But that's not likely to happen in this case because the other air mass may be more contaminated because it was closer to Mt. St. Helens, Farwell said. "Over a long period of time, you will get significant rain-out of airborne particulates, but it could take months.

"If people believed they should have been wearing the masks before the rain, they should probably continue to wear them," Farwell added.

Staying indoors helps but only provides limited protection from the airborne ash particles, Farwell said. Because of their small size, the particles are suspended in the air that normally leaks thru cracks around windows and doors and when the doors are open even for brief moments.

Farwell said even under the most protected conditions inside a building, occupants might still be subjected to a quarter or a half of the exposure experiences by those outside.

"If they knew what they were doing when the EPA set the national standards, we're already way over them," Farwell said. Medical researchers, however, are questioning the agency's air quality standards because of the larger size range of particulate matter included in the standard.

Farwell said airborne particulate levels will probably continue to exceed recommended levels for some time to come, particularly the EPA-adopted standard of what is safe per days when averaged over a year.

That level, 75 micrograms per cubic meter per day is particularly likely to be exceeded in eastern Washington and northern Idaho, he said. "We're close to that standard as it is, and now with Mt. St. Helens ash in the air we're sure to exceed it."

Dangers of Contaminants Seen in Animal Studies

Associate Agricultural Editor
 Moscow—By studying animals' reactions to chemicals and heavy metals, a University of Idaho veterinary science researcher is gaining valuable information about the causes of cancer and other human health problems.
 Dr. Loren D. Koller has detected "subtle" health-endangering characteristics in a number of substances that contaminate the environment. The threats to health posed by some environmental contaminants are difficult to pinpoint since medical problems may take a long time to develop and may be caused not by just one toxic substance but by several acting synergistically, Koller said.
 "One of the key concepts of environmental health science today is synergism—or how certain reactions may be produced by several agencies acting in cooperation. We're learning more about synergistic effects as we evaluate conditions caused by long-term, low-level, simultaneous exposure to environmental contaminants," the UI researcher explained.
 In a recent research project, Koller was one of a team of investigators who found a high incidence of tumors of the nervous system in the progeny of rats that had been fed methylmercury chloride plus sodium nitrite and ethylurea (EU).

"When pregnant rats are fed sodium nitrite and EU, their offspring are likely to develop cancer. From our research, we know that the carcinogenic effects of these chemicals can be markedly enhanced by including methylmercury chloride in the diet," Koller said.

To describe the synergistic factors which enhance or modify cancer-causing processes, Koller has coined the term "synergistic activity." This activity needs to be researched thoroughly, he said, "because cancer in man usually originates from multifactorial causes."

Studies of pregnant animals and their offspring are providing new knowledge about the way contaminants may interact in the production of toxic effects. By exposing sensitive fetuses to chemicals, scientists are able to detect development of tumors and other health problems more readily than would be possible in tests in which fetuses were not involved.

In a four-year research project he is undertaking for the Environmental Protection Agency, Koller will expose pregnant rats to several environmental contaminants. Offspring will be exposed until they are 24 months old.
 "The EPA wants to investigate possible toxic effects of the chemicals which are contaminating drinking water supplies in this country. As one of the researchers who have been awarded research grants, I will be studying the effects of pentachlorophenol of PCP, silver, 2 chlorophenol and 2,4 dichlorophenol," Koller said.

In another research project, the University of Idaho scientist is investigating the health-endangering properties of polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB).

Using a gift of money provided by Dow Chemical Co., Koller is also working to develop standard methodology for screening chemicals to determine if the chemicals adversely affect the immune system of experimental animals.

"Serious health problems may result when a chemical destroys or impairs any portion of the immune system. If an animal's defense mechanism to infectious agents is suppressed, it will be an easy prey to infection and may succumb to what normally would be a nonfatal condition," Koller said.

 To screen chemicals, Koller intends to develop a testing procedure that will be "simple, inexpensive and mechanized."

Stony Point

By Nellie Dean Steigers

Our Heaths—

Mrs. Mildred Heath, as usual, made her Monday morning medical visit to Lewiston on June 16. Daughter Flora and husband Forest 'Frosty' Gibbs arrived on Sunday from Spokane. Miss Patti Inghram, Winchester, and friend, Mike Curtis of California, spent Friday with grandmother Mildred. Norma, Ken and Lisa Rugg of Lewiston spent Saturday with her. Work progresses well on the Rugg home at Cherrylane.

The "Evelyn Heath" who entertained at tea as of last week's issue, was Evelyn Heath Evans, as most probably realized. (Just another of Nellie's many errors — sorry, but hopeless).

Miss Pam Fliger celebrated her 10th birthday with her Moscow family, also present in the home of grandmother Erma Stevens, sharing Father's Day honors with her Dad, Ernie Fliger, for the June 15 event! The last of 3 small orphaned skunks has breathed? It's last. Two met with various fates, but the third expired under the loving, grieving eyes of Steve Pettit, our conservation officer.

Stevens Story—

Mother Powell with daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Stevens, enjoyed Sunday dinner 'out' with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Klattenburg in Orofino, joined by Mrs. Dorothy Landon. Mrs. Landon returned with the Stevens to spend a few days.

Successful Bible School—

With an average daily attendance of 135, the Cottonwood Creek Community Bible School held its closing program on Friday night June 13.

Dinner on Sunday in Clarkston at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Custer was the extent of the Eldon Heimgartner celebration. During their absence, son Gerald and family had paid a visit at the Stony Point home, as so often happens to many of us.

Holl Stevens, on June 10th, shared Birthday cake and ice cream with the family and grandmother Erma Stevens, at home.

Thank Heavens, we did not suffer from Mt. St. Helen's last convulsion!

C. F. Lindor Honored! —

A wonderful picnic on Father's Day, June 15, with C. F. Lindor the honored guest, was held at Hells Gate Park, up Snake River above Lewiston, which was attended by all his children, all his grandchildren, and all his great-grandchildren! How could it have been nicer!

Delores and Leslie—
The Leslie Heimgartners accompanied the Arnie Zumho family to Moscow on Sunday, eating dinner at a restaurant there, and depositing Arnie's son, Slade Zumhove at the University basketball camp for the Search and Rescue Meeting—

Betty and Warney May and Rena and Ernie Andrews joined other members of area "Search and Rescue" teams for a demonstration meeting in Kendrick Saturday. Afterward they all enjoyed a potluck barbecue dinner in the Andrews home. There were thirty in attendance.

Weekend guests in the Dick Benscoter home were Vickie's brother Hib Bender from Honolulu, Hawaii and her sister Dee and husband Dr. Jerry Salling of Spokane. Saturday morning Ann Turner came for colcoming week. Enroute home, a brief visit was made at the Roy and Ardy-the Heimgartner home.

Mrs. Don Hoisington enjoyed attending the Bible School program at Cottonwood Creek on Friday eve, in which her daughters participated.

Allen Brown returned from Lewiston on Thursday where he mows 5 lawns, and attends his drum practice lessons and the school band. He and grandmother, Helena enjoy each other's company, and accomplish much.

Father's Day Special—

Weekend visitors from Montana driving an un-new truck, to haul home horses who wintered in our area, arrived at the Ernest Steigers Cherrylane home about 9 p. m. (our time) Friday night. Keith and Carolee Steigers of Missoula, also combined their trip with honoring Carolee's father, Art Eller, at Lewiston, and Ernest—Keith's father—at Cherrylane by a Father's Day visit! The couple spent overnight Saturday with her parents and attended a Sunday picnic dinner at Beachview Park, Clarkston, in Art's honor. Friday and Sunday nights were spent at Cherrylane, where on Sunday evening Ralph and Shirley Steigers, accompanied by two or their 3 lovely daughters, Melanie and Robin, joined the Ken Steigers at the E. Steigers home.

Dinner out, honoring Ernest, was enjoyed at a Lewiston restaurant hosted by son Ken and family. This was a bright event in Ernest's usual 'burnt offering' menu at home! After Monday breakfast at brother Ken's and later lunch, the Keith Steigers equipage joggled homeward over the pass to Missoula—horses, Schipperke dog, and humans on Monday.

Phone calls from son Bill, Lewiston and Kathleen Ratliff and husband, in Bothell—Kenmore, Wash., plus a missed visit, much regretted, from son David and grandson Danny (with a gift of trout, during the trip to Lewiston, made Father's Day 1980, 'one to remember'.

We regret having forgotten earlier to tell of Miss Robin Steigers and her splendid horse having won several awards and ribbons at a recent up-river 'horse event'.

Visiting and Visitors—

Son Harold and wife of Clarkston were Friday evening supper guests in the home of his parents, Ruth and Wayne Heimgartner. On Saturday, Ruth visited her sister Helen 'Slemp's' Lewiston home, and with Mother Hunter who was there also. Sunday eve, in Clarkston at the home of Bill and Laverne Harri, 'about finished it up'.

Cletis and Ben Hoisington, on Saturday afternoon, had as their callers, son Jim and children from Mission Creek. Son Frank was with them a while on Sunday.

Happy Birthday to our friend.

Sunday visitors in the Frank Benscoter home were Ray and Fran Benscoter and Danny of Lewiston; Mike and Marvette, Elk City and Don and service for Emma Kent on Tuesday chores were accomplished around the yard and Frankie says it's his happiest piece of news was that great-grandson, little Tyson, is in a body cast and able to be out of the hospital.

It was disappointing to drive down Main St. in Kendrick Saturday, June 14 (Flag Day) and see no flags displayed.
