Barley Research Work

Parma Scientists at 3 UI research and extension centers are testing the effect of barley yellow dwarf virus (BYDV) on Idaho wheat in the face of burgeoning levels of an aphid that

The oat-birdenerry aphid, one of 5 aphids that attack grain in the state, has developed from an occasional into a major pest, said Guy W. Bishop, research entomologist at the UI Southwest Idaho Research and Extension Center at Parma. He said its damage potential appears to be limiting to transmitting BYDV.

In some years, BYDV has caused total losses in spring grains infested early in the season, said Harry S. Fenwick, UI Cooperative Extension Service plant pathologist. It is now being found extensively in winter wheat but UI scientists are uncertain how much of a threat it poses to that crop. Fenwick said both the symptoms and effects of BYDV can be masked by generous watering and nitrogen applications.

At research and extension centers Parma, Aberdeen and Kimberly, UI scientists have inoculated winter wheat with BYDV. Some plots were planted on Sept. 1, others on about Sept. 15 and still others on Oct. 1. Bishop said research in other states indicates that BYDV is most damaging in early-planted crops, where it can get a stronger foothold before winter. The UI scientists will be checking for signs of BYDV-yellowing and dwarfing when wheat emerges in the spring and will compare yields at harvest in August.

The researchers are also attempting to establish an economic threshold for control of the oat-birdcherry aphid or the point at which the amount of damage threatened outweighs the cost of controls. Effective soil systemic insecticides can be applied he researchers don't know yet whether this practice is economically fe-

Idaho Pine Martens Go to South Dakota

Thirteen more Idaho pine martens are taking up residence in the Black Hills of South Dakota and later this year some Merriam's wild turkeys should be on their way to Idaho.

If trapping goes well in the two states, 120 birds will eventually be added to Idaho's wild turkey populations,, now estimated at about 2,500, and 40 of the furbearers will he introduced in the Black Hills ac-cording to Dick Norell, state game bird manager, Department of Fish and Game.

After the swap was initiated last year by the Idaho Department and the South Dakota department of Wildlife, Parks and Forestry, the first 25 turkeys were transplanted in Clearwater and Idaho counties, Norell said.

The 1980 shipment due around mid December will be transplanted in the Boise River drainage and possibly somewhere along the South Fork of the Salmon River, he added. "A. similar trade started our wild turkey population in 1962-63, when Colorado sent us some Merriam's when they were relocated in the Riggins-White Bird area," Norell added.

The department's policy plan calls for continuing transplants from existing flocks and from wild turkeys

Is there money after work?

Funny thing about retirement. The paychecks stop, but the bills keep coming.

Well, that's where United States Series H Bonds can help. Because once you invest in H Bonds, your money keeps working for you, now that you're not working for it.

You see, H Bonds pay you, with an interest check in the mail, every six months.

And there's even a way to get paid every month. Just buy a Bond a month for six months in a row. You'll get twelve checks a year until your Bonds mature.

So buy United States Series H Bonds before you retire.

Just because the paychecks stop doesn't mean the money should!

Now the H Bond interest rate averages 6% per year when held to maturity of 10 years. Lost, stolen, or destroyed H Bonds can be replaced if records are provided. H Bonds are redeemable after six months, by application through your bank.

Is there money after work?

Funny thing about retirement. The paychecks stop, but the bills keep coming.

Well, that's where United States Series H Bonds can help. Because once you invest in H Bonds, your money keeps working for you, now that you're not working for it.

You see, H Bonds pay you, with an interest check in the mail, every six months.

And there's even a way to get paid every month. Just buy a Bond a month for six months in a row. You'll get twelve checks a year until your Bonds mature.

So buy United States Series H Bonds before

Just because the paychecks stop doesn't mean the money should!

Now the H Bond interest rate averages 6% per year when held to maturity of 10 years. Lost, stolen, or destroyed H Bonds can be replaced if records are provided. H Bonds are redeemable after six months, by application through your bank.

Tigers Gals Clip Trojans 40-32 for Third Win

By Darren Clemenhagen

Spearheaded by a ball-hawking press, strong rebounding, and a 'fine' total defensive effort, the Kendrick girls BB squad defeated Troy 40-32 Saturday evening, Nov. 15 on the Tiger court. The win moved the girls above the .500 mark to 3-2 record.

Kendrick pressed throughout much of the game and they were effective in stealing passes or forcing the Trojans into turning the ball over. Most of Kendrick's points came on fast breaks for lay-in shots.

Coach Brian Pendleton had high praise for Lica Vallem and Jean and Jane Glenn. Jean and Jane did a wife, Elizabeth informs us that he good job on the boards, while Lisa threw in 20 points and picked up 8 steals.

The Tigers had built a 15 point lead by the end of the 3rd quarter, but a late Troy rally cut that lead to 8 by the end of the game.

Scoring: Kim Stonebreaker 2, Lisa Vallem 20, Melva Gibbons 1, Teresa Howerton 6, Bronwyn Manfull 6 Charlene Parks 6, Jane Glenn 4. The girls are off until Dec. 2 when they venture to Genesee to tackle the Bulldogs.

First Snow ,Arrived_ Sunday Afternoon

The first snow fall of the season settled over the area shortly after noon Sunday, Nov. 23. There had been some earlier flurries of snow in the higher elevations, but this was the first storm of any consequence as it put about two inches of cover on Genesee and the tops of the ridges in the Kendrick area.

Even Kendrick and Juliaetta received a covering of snow, although not as much as the higher country. The temperatures had been dropping down into the middle and high twenties at night during much of last week, prior to the storm. Roads were slick and icy over a wide area Monday morning and travel was treacherous most of the day.

"The 5 white turkey chicks were only slightly larger than the baby chickens when we got them," Jo said.

While most of us headed for the supermarket for our

Thanksgiving turkey, a few people have had their

Jo and Gary Gresseth of turkeys since spring.

"We kept the turkeys under a heat lamp until they feathered out then we put them in with the chickens. We've heard never to mix turkeys and chickens, but we never had any problems,"

They have an organic gardening book which has a poultry section which they've used in their poultry projects.

White turkeys are also supposed to be harder to raise than the more traditional looking gray turkeys.

Jo's parents in Montana had gray turkey roosters, which were mean, she said. "Our turkeys are very docile."

Gary refers to their white turkeys as beautiful, quiet giants.

The turkeys seemed smarter than a turkey's reputation. They were curious about what a camera was doing watching their every move at the feeder.

The turkeys made quiet noises while they ate or roosted, but they haven't made the traditional gobbling sounds yet. Jo said. She wasn't sure they were old enough yet.

"We fed them turkey starter when they were chicks as it is higher in protein, but now they eat with the chickens," Jo said.

Gresseth, sophomore at Nezperce High School, is in charge of feeding and watering the poultry plus marketing their surplus eggs.

They already have butchered one of the turkeys and it dressed out at 15 pounds so they expect these to be larger as they are older.

"Turkeys are a hobby," Jo said. "Gary wanted some chickens as he had been raised on a South Dakota farm. When we moved here. we found the farm house near the Clearwater River canyon northeast of Nezperce."

They moved here three years ago when Gary became school superintendent at Nezperce. It gave them room to raise chickens and they added geese, ducks and turkeys this year.

They got their start in chickens with several different breeds from Jean Bateman of Nezperce. The Gresseths now have a 70 egg incubator and raise their own chickens from the flock.

They save eggs from their purebred Hamburg or other purebred hens for hatching.

Throttle linkage, fuel injection timing problems common

By Susan Tiede

As farmers' work turned to the shop for the winter, the Dynamometer which Idaho Office of Energy and the Cooperative Extension Service sponsored workshops on tractor maintenance and fuel efficiency in the area.

Val Chambers and Verl Bird conducted the classes then ran tests on farmers' tractors to see how they compared with the Nebraska Test Station standards for tractors.

Chambers and Bird are instructors at Eastern Idaho Vo-Tech School in Idaho Falls.

They used a Hydra Guage measures pressure and computes it to horse-power.

The tractors had to be equipped with a power takeoff unit to be tested.

Check list of items to be tested are:

Tachometer PTO, tachometer engine, belt horsepower, fuel consumption, cylinder compression, water temperature, oil pressure, valve & tappets, piston rings, governor, injectors, fuel pump system, spark plugs, ignition point or magneto, carburetor, air cleaner, fuel filters, oil filters and main clutch.

Throttle linkage and fuel injection timing were the major problems they found while testing in the area.

Preventive maintenance reduces equipment failure, saves on operating costs, and improves safety, Bird said.

Tractors should have oil changed every 100 hours unless working conditions are unusually dirty then it should be changed more frequently.

A new vegetable oil expeller will provide the "missing link" in University of Idaho experiments assessing the feasibility of vegetable oil as a diesel fuel replacement.

The Japanese-made machine, worth about $4,500, was recently donated to the College of Agriculture by George Brocke, owner of George F. Brocke & Sons. Inc., Kendrick.

The machine removes oil from crops such as winter rape, safflower and sunflower. Previously, UI scientists had been forced to purchase oil from a California firm.

"This is the other link that we didn't have," said Charles L. Peterson, UI agricultural engineer.

"Without it, there was no way for us to grow the crop and see how much oil we were producing. And, it not only gives us the oil, it also gives us meal, which has feed value we need to study."

Peterson agricultural engineers must now develop a filtration system that will enable the oil to be used in a diesel engine and a system to preheat seeds for improved oil recovery.

Brocke, who has been in the rapeseed business for 30 years, is confident that rapeseed can be used in place of diesel fuel.

But he said research results must be available to back up the product when economic conditions warrant its use.

"Time is very important," he said. "Even if it takes two years for the price of diesel to justify the use of rapeseed oil, the research must be

If the anti-freeze is clear, a rust inhibitor should be added. A 50-50 mix of antifreeze-water is the best conductor of heat.

The Lewiston grain inspection station processes 12,000-25,000 samples of grain each year. The grade determines the price the grower will receive based on quality.

Grading involves 19 steps, according to Ed Matchey, chief inspector. That includes everything from the first weighing to the final typing of the certificate.

July through October is their busy season when they have up to 23 workers starting at 8 a.m. and working until they get done.

The rest of the year there are 7 workers. Right now only two elevators are sending in samples. The Lewiston station grades samples from Whitebird to the Canadian border plus a few in Washington and Oregon.

Matchey ran a sample through the grading process.

They start with 1300 grams from the white sacks sent from the grain elevator with grain from each load the farmer delivers.

The sample is "split down" in a funnel shaped device that is divided into 64 sections. Thirty-two sections go in each spout to insure the sample is well mixed.

Thirty grams are tested for damage. Although they test for moisture content, it isn't figured in the grade, Matchey said.

Dock is figured on anything smaller or larger than an average wheat kernel which includes weed, seeds and chaff. Dockage is cleaned out and thrown away.

Samples are run through sieves similar to those in a combine. A fan helps get out the chaff and dust which is weighed.

The sample is weighed to determine the pounds per bushel. It's supposed to be 60 pounds, but some go 56 and some years it's closer to 64.

It is split down again and run through a shaker. The sample is shaken 30 times in the machine to get out shrunken, broken, and cracked kernels. Those are weighed for the grading factor.

It is split 3 times to get the 30 grams for the damage factor. The foreign material such as green kernels and weed seeds are taken out with tweezers.

"We get a lot of rye. They must have raised it here at one time," Matchey said. The soft white wheat may have a few kernels of hard red wheat in it without being a problem, but a sample of red wheat shouldn't have the white kernels in it due to the protein difference.

The grain inspection

Garbanzo beans—also known as chick peas—may become an important cash crop for farmers of northern Idaho and eastern Washington.

Dick Auld, University of Idaho agronomist and plant breeder, said the legume crop's adaptability to the Palouse region is being studied by researchers at the UI and Washington State University.

Although garbanzo bean production is now centered in California, some varieties appear to grow well in northern regions.

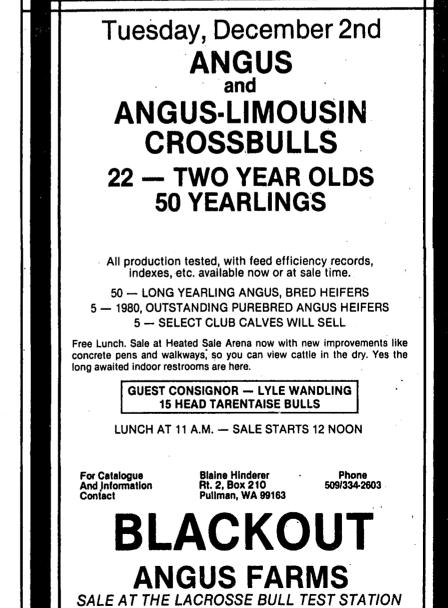

"In Canada, an active program is underway to promote production of garbanzo beans," Auld said.

In northern Idaho and eastern Washington, garbanzo beans might fill the place that green peas have occupied in crop rotations.

"To raise garbanzo beans, a farmer uses about the same cultural practices as with peas or lentils. The crop matures in late August or early September. Yields are similar to those for green peas and the market price employees are licensed for the different machines. They have to pass written, oral and working tests plus fill out forms before they can be licensed.

Matchey, an inspector for 22 years, said the most specialized station is the tweezers picking out foreign materials.

Wheat has 5 grades plus sample grade. Number 1 wheat allows 3 percent shrunken or broken kernels. Over 3 percent is number 2.

Grain grading is covered by seven notebooks full of regulations which also change fairly often, Matchey

Wheat is 80 percent of their work with barley being the majority of the rest which also includes oats. Montana sunflowers and corn.

The red wheats have protein levels checked, but white wheats don't.

Thirty grams of wheat are ground through a mill to make a flour for red wheat protein tests. Glass covered cups are put in the $19,000 Infra Analyzer. Ten to 15 seconds later, the computer lights up with the protein and moisture of the sample.

The machine, which is about the size of a microwave oven, can also do oil content and sprout

An average sample takes about 20 minutes to grade, but one with a lot of damage can take up to 11/2 hours. It costs $3.50 to run a sample.

Samples are kept four days in case they want it regraded.

They only get a few samples from farm storage which puzzles Matchey. He feels samples are a good way to see what's going on in the

When they grade barley, they have to run germination tests on it. They say malting barley needs almost 100 percent germination to malt, Matchey added.

The graded samples go for pheasant or animal feed.

has been more favorable," Auld said.

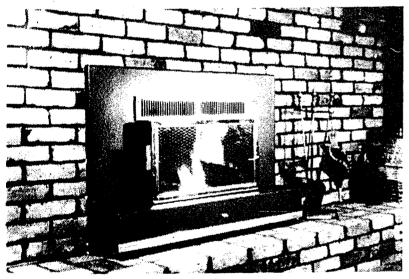

The University of Idaho scientist said adaptation trials for garbanzo beans will be conducted in 1981 with the cooperation of northern Idaho farmers.

"Selected growers will be asked to plant five-acre pilot fields, to see if garbanzo beans are adapted to commercial production in our area," Auld said.

Idaho, discussed a hog marketing co-op with the Twin Rivers Swine Growers and the Camas Prairie Swine Growers at a joint meeting in Crigmont, Nov. 20.

Abbott has worked with the PNW hog marketing cooperative since it formed at Nampa in August. They essentially have an auction over the telephone with 10 packers participating, he said.

They have shipped 4 loads of 200 hogs through the PNW. The PNW has sold lambs with this system for 8 years.

Last week, PNW sold 8 trucks of lambs. They are getting $4 above the national average through the co-op. All of those lambs went to Eastern packers.

PNW arranges a conference call, describes the animals and accepts bids like at an auction.

"A half hour before we make the call, we get the market service report on prices. Iowa Interiors is the hogs at the pickup point when the truck arrives.

"Once the hogs are on the truck, they aren't our responsibility. It's then between the trucker and the packer.

"We also got a $2 per head dock on red or black hogs despite the fact they hang as good a carcass as any," Abbot said.

"For the system to work, we need to ship a load of hogs every week. We've established a reputation for good hogs."

The Nampa based group wants to add either the north central Idaho area or southeast Idaho, so they can make the cooperative work for them as well as the packers by having a steady supply of hogs coming in.

The cooperative has been well received with packers in the western states with the coming of winter.

If they purchase Mid-West hogs, they can be snowed out in route and losses could be high while Idaho hogs are much closer and would arrive at the packer in better condition, Abbott said.

The PNW is a non-profit co-op which charges $2 per head for marketing which just covers the costs. There is also a $5 life-time membership fee. Over half of the

Burning straw is harmful

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article apeared in the Oct. 2 edition of the Idaho Farmer-Stockman.)

Heavy crop residues and Cephalosporium stripe rust appeared to be inspiring more grain straw burning than usual east of the Cascades this fall. Actually, the practice of burning straw, which has been discouraged for years, will result in more harm than good, scientists say.

A good job of burning will probably destroy about 90 percent of the spores, but it is not a recommended approach to the problem, because burning creates a major erosion hazard, said Dr. George W. Bruehl, professor of plant pathology at Washington State University. Too, it should be noted that there is still a reservoir of 10 percent or more of the infection which is not destroyed.

On the other hand, crop rotation is an effective and economical method of controlling Cephalosporium, according to Bruehl and other authoritative sources.

"It irritates me to no end to see this burning," Bruehl said. "Here is what we recommend. Instead of burning the straw, use a rotation in which winter wheat or winter barley is absent two years."

Any spring crop, such as lentils, spring barley or even spring wheat, will do the job. he said. Spring grains, although susceptible, escape any damaging infection from Cephalosporium.

. The newer white winter wheat varieties, including Daws, Stephens, Hyslop and McDemid, are highly susceptible to stripe, Bruehl pointed out. Gaines and Nugaines have more resistance, but when conditions are particularly favorable for the diseases, they, too, are vulnerable.

The causitive fungus is Burning won't help control this disease and may even make it worse, according to results of trials near Pendleton. Neither fall nor spring stubble burning reduced its incidence. Actually, burning stubble may spread the Cercosporella spores, because loss of the stubble cover increases the splashing effect of raindrops, SCS agronomist Ronald McCllellan says.

They market the hogs by the truck load and sell grades 1 and 2 hogs with smaller or crippled hogs being sold through the local salesyard.

The grading is done by eye on the basis of how fat the hog is. Abbott thought later they may also add sows to their marketing, but boars probably won't be, he said.

Darrell Paul, Moscow Conservation District associate member. represented Latah SCD and north Idaho on a Special 208 Project panel discussion.

He outlined the district's work with three water quality projects—the Cow Creek Demonstration Project, the Paradise Creek 208 planning project, and the Thorn Creek PL-566 Land Treatment Project.

Cow Creek is testing the ability of the Latah 5 point Program to control non-point source pollution.

Paradise Creek is under the Rural Clean Water Program and will conclude when a project application is submitted for the work stage. Thorn Creek is a proposed land treatment project.

"In the Paradise Creek project, the most important aspect is farmers working together. I know I always try harder when I'm working with other people," Paul concluded.

Paul and Latah SCD Acting Conservationist Ron Gill also participated in the dryland committee meeting.

Paul had a presentation in agencies during their work that meeting and also spoke with water quality programs out on north Idaho conservation problems.

Zucchini recipe given

By Rosa Smith Home Economist

Botulism is the most deadly of all food posi oning.

It's spore-forming organisms grow and produce toxin in the absence of oxygen such as a sealed canning jar. The toxin grows in low-acid foods.

Zucchini squash is a low acid food. It must be home processed by pressure canning unless it is made acid as for pickling.

There have been many recipes appearing for making "mock Pineapple." Unfortunately many are inaccurate in the ingredients to use. Some have little or no lemon juice.

"Mock Zucchini Pineapple" is a type of "pickled" vegetable. Enough acid solution must be used to penetrate the zucchini. In the recipe the important ingredients are lemon juice and pineapple

The recipe tested and recommended by the University of Idaho Cooperative Extension Service is as follows:

"MOCK ZUCCHINI PINEAPPLE"

1 gallon shredded zucchini 46 oz. can pineapple juice 2½ cups sugar

11/2 cups reconstituted Lemon Juice

½ teaspoons pineapple extract (optional)

Combine ingredients in a large kettle. Bring to a boil and simmer 20 minutes. Pour into clean hot canning jars to ½ inch of jar tops. Remove air bubbles. Add pre-treated lids and process in a boiling water bath 20 minutes for pints and 25 minutes for quarts (sea level altitude). Processing times for Idaho County must be adjusted for altitude. Examples: Grangevillepints 24 minutes, quarts 33 minutes. Kooskia (town) pints 22 minutes, quarts 29 minutes.

IDEAS

for thought

By the time the average child is two years old, he is about half of his adult height.

Tops among many new mothers and mothers-to-be are smocks. One attractive example is this long-sleeved brushed chambray top with a quilted yoke and delicate bow. In a pretty pale blue, it's made by Mothercare, retail specialists for mothers-to-be, babies and children under seven. The smock goes beautifully with fashionable, stretch-side jeans, especially when joined by a flower-studded insulated diaper bag.

Colicky babies can sometimes be calmed if they are given smaller, more frequent feedings. In any event the colic almost always is gone in three to four months.

A fine assortment of Linoleum was patented in clothes for the mother-to-be 1863 by Frederick Walton, an can be found in the Mothercare catalogue. Write Mothercare, P.O. Box 3881, N.Y., N.Y. 10163.

GRAVY DELIGHTS DIETERS

With everyone trimming calorie intake, it was only a matter of time before the arrival of "skinny" gravy. The gravy is made in the pan to take advantage of the crisp morsels that cling to the pan, but it is made after all the fat has been poured off. Although corn starch and flour are equal in calories, corn starch has twice the thickening power of flour so only half as much is needed. Corn starch leaves no pasty aftertaste and creates a translucent end result, a bonus for dieters who value the flavor and
