This week we played dodge ball for P. E. We also made black and white faces and name posters. We moved our desks the way we wanted them. Last week we got our report cards. And we started multiplication with 2 digits on top and 2 on the bottom. And then we learned how to multiply with 3 digits on top and 2 on the bottom.

FREEZE THOSE FROZEN POTATOES, U. OF IDAHO SPECIALIST SAYS Marlene Fritz

Assistant Agriculturist Editor Twin Falls-This winter's unusually cold weather may have nipped those potatoes you store in your garage.

If that's the case, cut off the frozen sections right away and cook the still-good portions into hash browns, french fries or twice-baked potatoes and put them in the freezer

"The important thing is to cook them in some manner before they rot," says Gary Kleinschmidt, University of Idaho Cooperative Extension potato specialist in Twin Falls.

Kleinschmidt says the optium storage temperature for spuds is between 38 and 45 degrees Fahrenheit. Cold temperatures cause them to freeze. Once they thaw, water seeps out through microscopic holes in the skin. To compound the problem, the frost-injured skin permits invasion of bacteria which produces enzymes that further degrade the potato. The result is a mushy spud.

Kleinschmidt says you can expect the salvaged chill potatoes you cook and freeze to taste a little sweeter than spuds that have not suffered from low temperatures. That's because chilling causes an increase in sugar buildup in potatoes. The french fries and hash browns you make from those potatoes also may be darker than normal due to the high sugar buildup.

If another cold snap hits, Kleinschmidt recommends moving any remaining potatoes from your garage to the coolest portion of your home.
