The funds may be used to generate more firewood in high demand areas or to make it more readily accessible to firewood gatherers. He also pointed out that some of the receipts from firewood permits will contribute to the 25 percent fund which returns to local counties for schools and roads.

The Department of Fish and Game is mailing more than 5,200 questionnaires to anglers in its survey to estimate the 1982 steelhead harvest in Idaho.

Holders of steelhead permits are asked to report how many days they fished in any of the river systems where the fish run-the Clearwater, Salmon and Snake-and how many fish were caught.

The form also has a space for anglers to indicate how many steelhead they caught and released. Printed regulations include a request that wild steelhead be returned to the water as a means of protecting a resource that has been on the decline.

"Future management of steelhead in Idaho depends on complete and accurate information. Please take a few minutes to answer the questions and return the questionnaire in the enclosed postage-paid envelope," the department requests.
