TAKES ON NEW TWIST

Catch-and-release steelhead fishing took on a new twist recently Catholic Church in Southwick will when Tom Bonn of Salmon tried to keep one of the big fish for his partner. Here's the story, as related by Kent Ball, a senior fishery research biologist with the Department of Fish and Game. Bonn landed the hatchery-produced steelhead while he and his friend were fishing on the main Salmon river about four miles upstream from the city of Salmon.

But instead of releasing steelhead as he usually does, Bonn tapped this one on the head, attached a steelhead tag and placed it in the bottom of the boat as a "keeper" for his fishing buddy, Ball said. Bonn's partner then put the fish on a stringer and hung it over the side of the boat-and the steelhead disappeared. It turned up, tag and all, about the boys and girls in grades 3 thru 70 miles upstream and two later at the Pahsimeroi spawntaking facility,
