Kendrick F. F. A. Proud of County Fair Results

We have been busy the last two weeks because of the Fairs that have been going on. During Sept. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 at the Latah County Fair. Swine, Diane Wilson, Dave Curry, Dave also got Reserve Champ for Fitting/Showing.

Change of Pace

This hazy autumn day Sends a message my way. It hums of frosted bees. Slowing down in locust trees. It sings of chilly nights And bronze colored sights Of brilliant foliage leaves Midst ivy under eaves. Birds sing a migrant song As fall clouds move along Toward winter. —Lucille Magnuson

Cameron Church Education Fair Is October 8

Want to know how NOT to study the Bible—or how to decide which Bible translation is "right"? Want to know what vitamin and mineral supplements have to do with good stewardship? Ever wondered how and why cults attract and hold young people—or what God's doing in the locker room? Or what Martin Luther's wife Katie has to do with women's lib? These and ten other topics will be covered at Cameron Fair '83—Adventures in Learning, to be held Saturday, Oct. 8 at Cameron Emmanuel Lutheran Church.

Designed by Cameron's newly formed Parish Education Committee, the Fair is being offered as a non-denominational public service, not only for the nearby communities of Juliaetta, Kendrick, Troy, Deary, Genesee Southwick and Cavendish, but also for those communities located in or near Lewiston, Clarkston, Moscow, Pullman, Colfax and Orofino.

During the day, participants will be able to attend three one-hour learning sessions of their choice, selecting from among sixteen varied topics.

Participants may pay either a $1.50 registration fee and provide for their own noon meal or $3.50, which will cover registration and lunch, to be provided by the Cameron youth group. Pre-registration is encouraged. Checks payable to Cameron Emmanuel Lutheran Church may be sent to Pastor John Blom, who is in charge of registration. Tigers Clip Bulldogs 18-12 In Overtime

Kendrick High School's Tigers, the team that hadn't won a football game since the 1980 season, finally broke into the win column last Friday night in a ragged but exciting 18-12 overtime contest.

The Tigers had the 1981 season cut short because of team discipline problems and then went 0-8 in 1982. This year, showing lots of spirit in its first three losing efforts, the Tigers finally got the lucky breaks Friday night and put its offensive game into high gear.

After a scoreless first quarter, the Tigers got on the score board when quarterback Tony Hewett tossed a completed pass worth 17 yards and a touchdown to end Jack Meyers. A run attempt for the extra point failed, but the Tigers took a 6-0 lead into the intermission.

The third quarter was scoreless again for both teams, but in the fourth quarter Genesee struck back and then went ahead as Eric Feigenbutz tied the game 6-6 and then Dave Cvanera put the Bulldogs on in front 12-6 when he caught a pass from Bulldog quarterback Sam Smith on the 11 yard line and went into score.

Trailing by a touchdown and with less than two minutes left in the game, Kendrick's Troy Hewett took to the air again and this time connected with running back Slad Zumbhofe in a play covering 45 yds. Kendrick couldn't convert the extra point try and the clock ran down with the score tied 12-12.

In the overtime, each team is given four plays from the ten yard line to score. Kendrick won the toss and on the first play, Hewett's play was incomplete. On the second Troy gained four yards on a rollout and then 6 yards from the goal line on the third down, he tossed to Zumbhofe for the touchdown.

Genesee then had its chance to score, but on the first down the Bulldogs fumbled and Robert Weisenfels pounced on the ball and Kendrick had its victory.

American Ridge

By Vicky Bencoter

American Ridge residents are sorry to be minus two more neighbors—Mark and Julie Heimgartner are now living in Kendrick and Rena and Ernie Andrews have moved to Moscow. Although we so often neglect visiting our neighbors, it's nice to know that they are "just over the hill" or "around the bend in the road"—especially if you need help of any kind. We will miss both families.

However we are glad to report that we still have Ken and Deb Le Blanc and their two children, Jenny and Morgan, who occupy the George Havens former home. They like it here even though their jobs require quite a bit of travel, as Ken is a teacher in Lewiston High School and Deb is a teacher in Moscow High. We like having them and hope traveling conditions won't be too bad when winter arrives.

Walt and Babe Bencoter visited Jack and Molly Bencoter in Pullman on Thursday. On their arrival home they found Priscilla Armitage washing windows—not many have such good luck!

Saturday callers in the Bencoter on Saturday were Nancy and Steve Nye and Tim and Becky Dupea on Sunday.

Dick Bencoter visited his daughter Holly Millar and family in Spokane on Saturday and returned Sunday after stopping in Moscow to visit his mother Ella at the Latah Care Center.

Little Henry and Christine Holt of Juliaetta spent Friday afternoon with Betty May.

Amy Holt of Cedar Ridge was a Sunday visitor in the May home.

Vicky Bencoter was in Lewiston on Wednesday to visit and have lunch with her daughter, Karen Gold and her family and to honor Karen's birthday. During the afternoon she called on the Larry Galloways.

Andy and Minnie Cox visited the David Neals in Moscow on Sunday. They also called on Edd Kent and Ella Bencoter at the Latah Care Center and Agnes Glenn at Paradise Villa. They found each one in good spirits.

Don Bencoter visited his mother Jo on Tuesday afternoon. Bill Bencoter of Lewiston had dinner with his grandmother the evening of that same day, much to her pleasure.

Deb LeBlanc joined Elaine Grose-close as co-leader for a group of Brownie Girls meeting at the Kendrick firehall on Monday evening. They hope to meet every other Monday and we wish them success with their efforts.

The Bob Callisons were pretty well occupied with the Fair in Lewiston this past week. Audra and John each exhibited a sheep they had raised. Both received two blue ribbons, one for quality and one for fitting and showing. We congratulate them on their achievement because we realize it took a lot of hard work.

Vicky Bencoter visited over the weekend with her daughter Lesley Kopp in Cove, Oregon.

Grain Stubble Called Too Valuable to Burn

Clifton Anderson Associate Agricultural Editor
Moscow: Grain stubble and straw are "too valuable" to burn, according to Steven Reinertsen extension associate at the University of Idaho College of Agriculture.

"Although some farmers believe burning will effectively control plant diseases, weeds or insects, the facts do not bear them out. Carl Engle, extension soil specialist at Washington State University says there is no evidence that burning is a practical method of controlling pests," Reinertsen said.

"The only advantage of stubble burning is that it is an easy way to clean fields for quick tillage. This advantage is offset by numerous disadvantages."

A serious disadvantage of burning is the loss of nutrients which are contained in crop residue, Reinertsen said.

"If we consider just the loss of nitrogen, phosphorus and sulfur, the dollars-and-cents cost for burning light stubble is about $10 per acre. The loss will be as much as $25 per acre if heavy stubble is burned," he said.

Burning has the long-term effect of damaging soil structure, Reinertsen said. Residue returned to the soil will enhance the production of materials which hold individual soil particles together into what are called soil aggregates, he said.

"Soil aggregation at the soil surface helps prevent crusting and surface sealing—and this enhances water infiltration and soil aeration," Reinertsen said.

"The amount of water a soil can hold is related to its texture and is

Wildlife ecology projects designed for classroom use

Moscow—Fitting another course into the school curriculum would be a major project for most school districts. Yet Project Wild, which teaches awareness of the earth as habitat for people and wildlife, is approaching the teachers with topics for writing assignments, supplementary games that reinforce basic learning skills, topics for writing assignments and resource problem situations for students to solve with in existing school subjects. The activities have been tested and evaluated in classroom situations.

Lewis Nelson, Jr., Wildlife Resource professor and member of the steering committee, is excited about the projects, which has been developed over a three-year period. "Because this program is presenting neutral material—not special interest content—support is coming in from 18 state fish and game agencies, the Canadian Wildlife Federation, the American Humane Association, and the Defenders of Wildlife. It is rewarding to see these organizations support the same educational program." Other potential sponsors have also inquired about Project Wild.

The interdisciplinary curriculum activities have been set up through the Western Association of Fish and Game Agencies and the Western Regional Environmental Education Council (WREEC). A seven-member steering committee includes educators who are agency personnel.

the amount of aggregation and organic matter. When organic matter is returned to the soil, it improves the soil's ability to store water for next year's crop."

Reinertsen said burning is currently recommended for grass-seed fields. When perennial grass is grown for seed production, post-harvest burning has been shown to improve seed yields.

For grain fields, burning is not justified and is no longer being practiced by the majority of grain growers in eastern Washington and northern Idaho, he said.

In his extension activities, Reinertsen presents farmers with the results of research undertaken in the Solutions for Environmental and Economic Problems (STEEP) project. He conducts an educational program in northern Idaho and eastern Washington.

Taking Care of

Our Wilderness

By Michael Hofferber
UI News Bureau

Moscow—In 1964 the U. S. Congress created a nationwide wilderness system with the passage of the Wilderness Act. Certain undeveloped and primarily roadless lands were designated as places "where man is a visitor but does not remain."

While the word "wilderness" conjures up images of unmapped, savage places where man's foot has never trod, the truth is that the 80 million acres presently included in the National Wilderness Preservation System are not entirely pristine, nor are they unaffected by man or his activities.

Acid rain is killing fish in some high mountain lakes. Backpackers are beating out paths and causing erosion in fragile ecosystems. Exploration geologists are staking oil, gas and mineral claims in secluded meadows. These and other impacts are evidence of the need for effective wilderness area management, a topic that has been buried beneath the debate on acquiring new wilderness lands.

"The big battles on adding new land to the wilderness system are mostly over," noted Ed Krumpke, assistant professor of wildland recreation management at the University of Idaho and director of the US Wilderness Research Center. "Now is the time to direct our attention and proper use of the wilderness areas already established."

To encourage such a refocusing of attention, the UI Wilderness Research Center will be sponsoring a special workshop next month for the people who manage and make decisions about wilderness areas—government officials, state fish and wildlife officers, environmental groups, outfitters, hunters, miners and ranchers.

Dubbed the "First National Wilderness Management Workshop," the event will take place across 4 days, Oct. 11-13, and include among its speakers four of the most influential men presently guiding the nation's wilderness policies—Senator James McClure (R-Idaho), who is chairman of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources; R. Max Peterson, chief of the U. S. Forest Service, Don Burford, director of the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), and Russell E. Dickenson, director of the National Park Service.

In addition, other panelists at the wilderness management workshop will include representatives of environmental organizations, user groups in mining, grazing and recreation state fish and wildlife departments, and tourism offices.

The intent of the workshop, Krumpke explained, is to bring all these decision makers (many of them with divergent points of view) together with other resource managers to review major issues and conflicts in the hopes of resolving them.

Among the issues to be discussed Krumpke said, will be the drastically increasing numbers of visitors to wilderness areas. The Maroon Bell wilderness area of Colorado alone accommodates more than 50,000 people each year, and that number is growing.

"A lot of these wilderness areas are very fragile ecosystems with growing seasons of no more than 40 to 60 days. It doesn't take too many people walking through them to have an impact," Krumpke said.

Fire management is another topic to be discussed at the workshop. Should naturally-caused forest fires be allowed to blaze unrestrained in wilderness areas? Or should they be controlled as they are in non-wilderness areas?

What about wilderness access and development? Is there too much or too little? Should insects and diseases be controlled? What is to be done about minerals and grazing rights? How should hunting and fishing be restricted?

These and other wilderness issues will be aired by the workshop participants at UI during four days of speakers and small group discussions. By the end of the session Krumpke said he hopes to see the participants suggesting specific management actions to be taken.

The proceedings will be printed up afterwards and distributed nationally.

Although Senator McClure is expected to introduce a wilderness bill in Congress in October that could place additional Idaho lands into a wilderness designation, Krumpke emphasized that the First National Wilderness Management Workshop will not be a discussion of new wilderness area acquisitions. It will focus, instead, on the management of existing wilderness resources.

"I really believe that this is the right time for a workshop of this kind," Krumpke said. "People are realizing that if we don't take care of these wilderness areas the pressures are there to really create some changes. By mismanagement, or lack of management, we could lose something that could never be regained."

Krumpke compared the present status of the National Wilderness Preservation System which enters its 20th year in 1984 to the early days of the National Park Service. "We are in those formative years that will set the direction of management of our wilderness for many years to come," he said.

The First National Wilderness Management Workshop will be held in the UI's Student Union Building and the Cavanaugh's Motor Inn. Registration fees are $95 if received before Sept. 15 or $110 after that date.

For more information write or call Edwin E. Krumpke Wilderness Research Center, University of Idaho Moscow, ID 83832. Phone (208) 885-911. Registrations are being handled through UI Continuing Education.

Fish and Game Citations
Total 4,000 in Fiscal Year

Department of Fish and Game conservation officers checked about 105,000 licenses in the field and issued 4,000 citations during fiscal 1983, enforcement chief Dale Baird reported.

Both totals were down 2.3 percent from the previous year, Baird said. "I suspect that one reason for the slight decline was the high water this spring that kept anglers away from many streams," he added.

Fishing and hunting without licenses or during closed season and overlimits were among the more common violations, along with the use of illegal gear and failure to observe special fishing regulations in force on some water, Baird said.

Offenders were assessed more than $122,000 in fines and forfeitures and about $55,000 in civil penalties, Baird said.

With seasons for big game and upland birds getting underway Baird advised that a careful study of printed regulations is the best way for hunters to avoid citations.

—Upland game hunting areas and bag and possession limits vary. Regulations give specific information. —A fully-feathered wing or the head must remain on all dressed birds to allow identification of species and sex.

—Always carry a valid hunting license and, for big game, the proper tag and permit. Validate the tag and attach it to the largest portion of the animal immediately after it is taken.

—Be sure that evidence of sex is shown on deer and elk as the regulations specify and be aware of reporting requirements where they apply.

FOREIGN AGRICULTURISTS HERE TO LEARN ABOUT PRESERVING FOOD

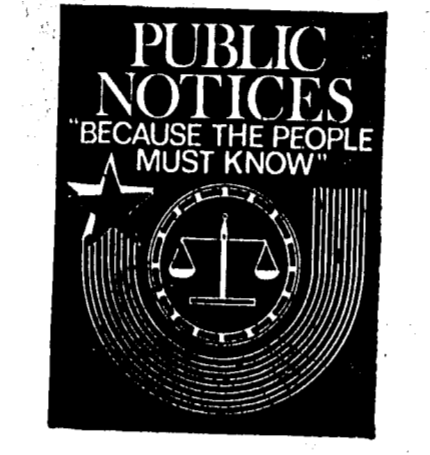

Moscow—Eleven men and women involved in agriculture in developing countries throughout the world are on the University of Idaho campus until October 14 to learn techniques for preserving food after harvest.

They are taking a shortcourse on preventing loss of perishable crops after harvest, sponsored by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Office of International Cooperation and Development and the UI's Postharvest Institute for Perishables.

The men and women are from Costa Rica, Belize, Indonesia, Rwanda, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Burundi, Jordan, Kenya and Nigeria, and were brought here either by their own governments or by the USDA.

On the campus, they will learn techniques for preserving food that they will be able to apply to their own countries, as well as the reasons why food spoils and reasons for preserving it, according to Dr. Robert Skiles, Postharvest Institute Director.

They will learn about the control of pre- and postharvest pests, and become aware of the economic and cultural factors that have impact on postharvest loss prevention programs.

WILLIAM A. ROTH,

COMMISSION CORRECTS DATES FOR ONE ANTELOPE HUNT

Amendments to correct 1983 big game regulations for a controlled antelope hunt and a black bear season has been approved by the Fish and Game Commission.

In hunt 459-2, the amendment adds October 8 through 12 for does or fawns only and October 13 through 23 either sex. Other dates shown for the hunt October 29 thru November 2, does and fawns, only, and November 3 through 13, either sex, are correct.

A closing date was corrected for the black bear season in management units 31, 39 and 45 to read April 1 through May 31, 1984 (instead of June 30, 1984). The other dates shown for the units are correct. The amendment also shows that there are no footnote legends following unit 45.

In addition, they will travel throughout Idaho and the Northwest to see how U. S. agriculturists handle perishable crops, like vegetables and fruit from producing seed and growing the crop, to harvesting, handling and transporting it, and storage, processing, and marketing.

Beginning Sept. 21, the group will travel to Southern Idaho and to UI agricultural centers to see facilities for research and processing of potatoes, beans, onions, and carrots, and later will visit fresh-packing plants and canning and freezing plants in Washington.

This is the first shortcourse of its kind to be taught by the Postharvest Institute for Perishables at UI. Skiles said that if it is successful, the USDA may send other groups of agriculturists from developing countries for training here.

The PIP also seeks to help developing countries by sending teams of experts to teach them how to harvest and bring their food to market in better condition.

There, on Friday, they were joined by Ardythe's father, C. F. Lindor, a brother of the two elder ladies. Mr. Lindor returned to the Lewiston Nursing home after their departure! It was a most pleasant interlude for all concerned.

Thursday, filled their visiting quota for the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Heimgartner, on Thursday, Sept. 22, drove to the Walla Walla home of Delores' brother, Floyd Gunnow and family. Floyd, a semi-invalid, has worked for the Corps of Engineers for some years.

On Sunday a drive to the Clearwater area was made and families of her children were visited.

All goes well at the Cletis Heisington home. On Tuesday, Sept. 20, daughter Cleta Mae was their visitor from Spokane and Son Arnold visited on Sunday.

New Home Arrives—

The new home of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Hayhurst now rests on Cottonwood Creek above and directly across from the Cottonwood Creek Community Church, having arrived by truck during the past week. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Steigers, 'ferried' by Mary Hayhurst, were among the first callers on Sunday, Sept. 25.

This event was saddened by grief felt at the sudden death of friend Steven Vervalen, close neighbor of the E. Steigers, at North Cherrylane. More details will be available by next week's issue. Steve Vervalen has been a good neighbor to the elder couple and will be missed very much.

Mrs. Elaine Hoisington spent 4 days camping at the recent Nez Perce County Fair, where her children had livestock entered! Various ribbons were awarded on other articles entered by her daughters—a busy life!

Flora and Forest Gibbs of Spokane spent from Friday until Sunday evening in the home of her mother, at Hubbard Gulch this past week. Freda Biggs, her present weekly helper was with her on Monday news gathering time.

Mildred made a first call at the new Hayhurst home on Cottonwood Creek on Saturday, before the carpet layer had arrived. The view from this home is lovely. Distant mountain tops may be seen, looking far up the Cottonwood Creek valley! The rear view is very pleasant, also.

Sunday evening guests in the Ernest Steigers home included son David and wife Montez Steigers of Juliaetta.

Almost simultaneously, friends Fred Cowger and wife Fern Berry Cowger of Clarkston arrived, enroute home from a frustrated search for elusive McComas Meadows, where Fern was to have assisted with violin (guitar or such) and her beautiful singing voice, at a picnic gathering of musicians! It was never located, so a 'stop' at long-time friends home and watermelon was enjoyed by all.

TO BUY or NOT TO BUY?

Some people judge an apple by its cost.
No matter how cheap, they take it.
They put an apple where their purse is.

Others, like our customers,
judge an apple by its taste.
If it's fresh, crisp, juicy, having its natural shine,
they want it.

That's why we say:
PUT OUR APPLE WHERE YOUR MOUTH IS—the taste is the one you always want to buy.
