

Snowy Night In Kendrick-

Another snow storm was already piling more cover on the ground in Kendrick last Thursday evening when photographer Ken Hunter snapped this winter scene. The arrival of the snow ended a severe cold wave that had held the region in its grip for almost a week. By Friday the snow had turned to rain as the temperatures continued to rise and by Monday the snow had turned to a slick, slushy mass, making travel by foot or vehicle wet and uncomfortable. The main highways were mostly clear and bare, but many of the side roads were packed snow with a rain water covering, very slick. Country road conditions in Genesee were bad enough to force cancellation of school bus schedules in District 282, but Kendrick children didn't get that extra day of vacation. (Photo by Ken Hunter)

Two Genesee Businesses Change Ownership Jan. 1

The ownership and operation of two Genesee business firms took place with the beginning of the new year, January 1. Ray and Carol Trautman assumed ownership and management of Genesee Food Thrift Store Tuesday morning and Ronald Bielenberg took over operation of the Genesee Service Station and bulk plant.

The Trautmans, recently of Tomasket, Washington, purchased the Genesee Food Center from Joe and Shirley Randall, who operated the grocery store for the past 7 1/2 years. The Trautmans have three children, Ray, Jr., Linda and Mark and are presently making their home in the Hilltop Apartments in Genesee. The Randalls indicated their plans are indefinite.

Willis Moser, who has owned and operated the Genesee Service Station for the past 15 years, turned over the operation of that business to Ron Bielenberg. Ron is a Genesee native, but has been living in Sunnyside, Calif. until he made arrangements to purchase the service station. He is the son of Herman and Rosella Bielenberg. Ron, his wife, Robin and sons, James and Robbie, are currently making their home with the elder Bielenbergs. Willis and Beverly plan to continue making their home in Genesee.

He was 17 and she was 21 when they married November 17, 1907, at Juliaetta. They observed their 76th wedding anniversary last November. "And they say teen-age marriages don't last," a son, Benjamin H. Weatherby of Lewiston, remarked Sunday. "This one did."

She was born July 23, 1885, at Farmersburg, Ind., to George N. and Eliza Buckelew. When she was 3 the family came west and first homesteaded on Texas Ridge between Kendrick and Deary. Later the family moved to Juliaetta where she married Weatherby.

In addition to her husband and son, she is survived by two other sons, Thomas Weatherby of Milton, Oregon, and Xena Weatherby of Fresno, Calif.; four daughters, Ruby Platt of Woodburn, Oregon, Opal Paul of Hemet, Calif., and Betty Johnson of Mesa, Arizona, 16 grandchildren, 29 great-grandchildren and 16 great-great-grandchildren.

Farmers Cut Use Of Fertilizer and Ag. Chemicals

Sales of fertilizer and agricultural chemicals declined in 1983 but agriculture college faculty members at the University of Idaho, Washington State University and Oregon State University expect farmers to buy more of these products in 1984.

In an economic outlook report issued jointly by the three universities, faculty members say the new federal farm program was responsible for the slowdown in fertilizer and farm chemical sales. The new payment-in-kind (PIK) program encouraged farmers to withdraw cropland from production.

"Field crop acreages are expected to increase 11 to 17 percent in 1984. This increase will be due primarily to 1983 PIK acreages moving back into production. The increased crop acreage will generate increased use of most agricultural inputs," the university specialists said.

Fertilizer use is expected to increase by 20 percent in 1984, they said. In 1983, use of fertilizer declined and prices fell about 4.7 percent. "A price increase which may exceed 10 percent is projected for 1984," the agriculture college spokesmen said.

Although the use of agricultural paid by U. S. consumers climbed 4.8 chemicals dropped in 1983, the prices percent over the year. In 1984, the university educators said, use of agricultural chemicals will increase and prices will rise about 5 percent.

Farm machinery sales slumped in 1983—although prices rose about 7 percent. "Machinery sales will probably pick up in 1984," authors of the economic outlook report said.

The report noted the following developments which affect the costs of agricultural production:

—Use of fuel on farms will probably increase in 1984. Gasoline prices should remain relatively stable, but diesel prices are expected to rise slightly. In 1983, gasoline and diesel prices showed declines.

—Electricity costs for Pacific Northwest farmers are continuing to move upward. Rate structures announced by the Bonneville Power Administration will add about 4 mills per kilowatt hour used by farmers. One effect of the Northwest Power Planning and Conservation Act will be to make future rates to farmers much more uniform across the region.

—Farm wage rates are likely to rise 3 to 5 percent in 1984. Last July the average rate for U. S. farm workers was $4.12 per hour. In Idaho the average hourly rate was $3.71.

—Interest rates for farm loans declined from 1982 to 1983. The rates are expected to remain relatively stable in 1984. However rates will be affected by U. S. monetary policy and fluctuations in the rate of inflation.

—Values of farmland have declined during the past two years. Economists believe a turnaround in farmland values may be materializing. At least farm real estate prices are not expected to show further declines in 1984.

Electric Consumption Set New Records Says WWP Official

The Washington Water Power Co. established several all-time high electric consumption records between December 21 and 24 because of record low temperatures. The company was able to meet the unexpected high demand because of the recent addition of two electric generating facilities and the purchase of power from outside the region.

The highest one-hour peak usage occurred on Dec. 23, when 1,661 megawatts were consumed between 9 and 10 a. m. This one-hour usage record broke the previous high which was established the day before when the consumption reached 1,627 megawatts between 8 and 9 a. m. Prior to these record-setting peaks, the old record was .161 MW, established January 29, 1980. The company also recorded two all-time high usage records for a 24-hour period. The first record was set on December 22, when total electric consumption in the area served by WWP reached 37,561,000 kwk. This 24-hour record was broken December 23, with a reading of 38,143,000 kwk. Prior to these record-setting periods, the high usage in the WWP load area for a 24-hour period was 36,232,000 kwk, set on January 29, 1980.

"When you consider that the Bunker Hill Company, WWP's largest customer until it closed in 1981, was in operation in 1980, it is significant that the new records were established this December without the 60 MW energy load required by the Bunker Hill mine and smelter," said Les Bryan, WWP vice president for power supply.

"It was fortunate for WWP and its electric customers that during this cold spell the company's new generating resources, Kettle Falls and Colstrip Unit No. 3, were operating at near full capacity. During this period, Kettle Falls production averaged 41 MW while Colstrip produced for WWP an average of 89 MW of test power."

Exports of Farm Products Continue To Decline

Sales abroad of U. S. farm products continued to decline in 1983 and the export picture does not appear much brighter for 1984, representatives of three Pacific universities said in a year-end report.

Agriculture college faculty members at the University of Idaho, Washington State University and Oregon State University prepared the report. U. S. Wheat exports dipped in 1983, they said. While predicting further declines in wheat exports in 1984, the educators did see one hopeful sign—a probable increase in the export of coarse grains for livestock feed.

"White wheat producers in the Pacific Northwest face another difficult year," the educators said in their report. "Export sales—which account for 90 percent of the region's white wheat output—will remain weak. Commercial sales to Japan and Korea will probably remain at their usual levels. Intensified competition from Canada, Australia and Argentina will likely reduce U. S. sales to India. Increased exports to other markets will depend heavily on the availability of special credit arrangements and Public Law 480 assistance."

For most farm crops produced in the Pacific Northwest, export markets are not readily available, the economic forecasters said. "Until economic recovery and lower interest rates return currency exchange rates

Beautiful Apples Find Good Market

Clifton Anderson, Associate Agricultural Editor, Moscow, Idaho—For the current marketing year, Pacific Northwest orchardists have hard-to-beat competition of beautiful apples and good markets, according to an economic report issued jointly by the agriculture colleges at the University of Idaho, Washington State University and Oregon State University.

In 1983, growers in the three-state region had larger apple crops than in 1982. The fruit was of good size and color and was harvested in a timely manner that safeguarded its high quality, the report said.

"Many of the other producing areas delayed harvest in an attempt to achieve better size and color. Color improved, but not size. This strategy tends to reduce storage quality," the report said.

Looking ahead, economic forecasters at the Pacific Northwest universities saw promising prospects for apple growers.

"With the economy slowly gaining strength customer demand should remain relatively buoyant through the current marketing year. Rising disposable incomes, declining unemployment and the continuing shift to fresh fruit and vegetable consumption will be plus factors in movement of the 1983 crop," they said.

to lower levels, export expansion will be retarded," they said.

In 1981, the value of U. S. agricultural exports reached a peak of 43.8 billion. Their total value dropped to $34.5 billion in 1983. This represented a reduction of 12 percent from 1982 and a decline of 21 percent from 1981, the agriculture college faculty members said.

U. S. agricultural exports are hindered by "a fragile international credit system," the educators said. Many developing nations have serious problems with foreign debt and balance of payments, they said.

For the 1983-84 marketing year, the experts predicted U. S. wheat exports in the range of 32 to 34 million tons "with no significant improvement in price."

The agriculture college representatives said there should be moderate gains in the export value of U. S. livestock products, dairy products, sugar, fruit, nuts and vegetables. "Together, these products make up a relatively small share of total U. S. agricultural imports. However, fruits, nuts and vegetable exports are important to the Pacific Northwest," they said.

The educators said U. S. farmers may be adversely affected by production restrictions, price supports, tariffs, import quotas and other governmental programs enacted for the purpose of "protecting" U. S. business and agriculture.

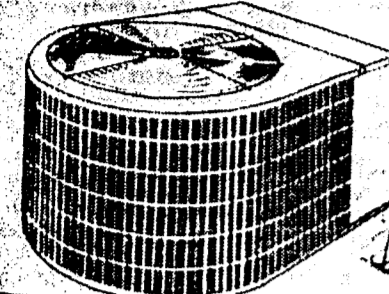

"U. S. price support policies increase world prices for agricultural products—and this encourages other nations to produce and export more or to import less," the educators said.

To improve the U. S. position in world trade, the educators proposed an all-out campaign to cut the production costs of U. S. agricultural products. "For U. S. producers to survive in world competition, we need agricultural research and other long-run programs designed to lower costs. Lower costs will stimulate U. S. exports," they said.

Winter Weather and Wildlife

LEWISTON — Winter weather has the same effect on wild animals as it does on people: it causes them to huddle up. This time of year, the hardy souls who venture afield on foot can see a lot of wildlife in a small area as chukar and Hungarian partridge and quail stay in spots to keep warm. Because of this, hunters taking advantage of the last week of Idaho's upland bird season should be careful to exercise sportsmanlike conduct.

This means foregoing practices that are unethical or illegal, according to Sam McNeill, wildlife manager with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. "When the cold concentrates game birds, they become easy targets on the ground," he said. "It's technically legal to harvest them this way, but sportsmen will always allow their quarry to take wing before shooting."

Another hunting practice McNeill cautioned against is illegal as well as unethical. "We frown on hunting from vehicles anytime, and our officers write quite a few citations each year for this. In the winter, road hunting really stacks the odds against the birds," he said.

The wildlife manager noted that every year when severe weather sets in, the department receives many inquiries about bird feeding. "We don't feed game birds because of past experience. It simply isn't feasible to feed them on a large enough scale to have a major impact," he said.

Mortality is high among most bird species due to starvation, disease and predation. He explained that nature compensates for the losses with a high reproduction rate. "Out of that clutch of 10 to 15 eggs a birds lays in the spring, only a few offspring may survive to the next breeding season. But that's enough to keep the population going," he said.

For those who are interested in feeding birds themselves, McNeill offers a few tips: 1. Cracked corn is one of the best feeds for game birds, and it is readily available. 2. Feed should be placed where birds can spot approaching predators in time to escape. 3. Distribute feed at more than one site. Putting it all in one site, putting it all in one place will concentrate the birds, making them targets for predators like the feral cat. 3. Feeding should be consistent. Wild birds quickly become dependent on an artificial food source, and if it is suddenly taken away this will add another stress. The birds won't starve, but they will be forced to seek out other food sources.

While the upland bird season closed December 31, sportsmen can extend their hunting opportunities on through February 29 by pursuing a four-legged game species, the cottontail rabbit. "Cottontail hunting really doesn't get good in northern Idaho until there's snow cover," observed Dwight Kilgore, regional conservation officer with the department. He said snow aids the hunter by making the rabbits more visible.

Two methods of hunting cottontails are popular in Idaho, and, according to Kilgore, both are enjoyable and effective. "Beagling is gaining popularity in the West," he said, and the reason is, it's just a lot of fun to watch the dogs work.

In this style of hunting, beagles are used to trail the rabbits in the snow. The small, slow dogs run their quarry in large circles, often pushing them out in the open toward the hunters. The other favored method of cottontail hunting is simply to stalk them with a .22 rifle. Though less exciting than beagling, rifle hunting tests a hunter's shooting skill and woodsmanship. "You have to know where to look for cottontails and how to sneak up within range," said Kilgore. "Once you get there, it takes a pretty steady eye to hit that small target."

The daily bag limit for cottontail rabbit is eight; the possession limit is 16. Any hunter who plans to go afield during the January-February portion of the cottontail season must purchase a 1984 Idaho hunting license, available from private vendors and/or Idaho Department of Fish and Game offices.

Thanks to Bad Weather Potato Crop is At Manageable Level

Potato growers' propensity to over-produce was offset in 1983 by bad weather that cut yields and helped to bring the supply of potatoes to a manageable level, according to a year-end economic report issued jointly by colleges of agriculture at the University of Idaho, Washington State University and Oregon State University.

Jo Guenther, an agricultural economist who serves as assistant director of the University of Idaho Cooperative Extension Service, wrote the section of the report dealing with potatoes. He said total production of potatoes in the Pacific Northwest fell 3 percent below the 1982 total.

"If Idaho had not suffered from a cold, wet spring, cool-then-hot growing season weather and an early killing frost, production in the Pacific Northwest would have been higher than a year ago. Fortunately, Mother Nature put a lid on overproduction in 1983," Guenther said.

In the nation, the 1983 fall crop was estimated at 292.7 million hundredweight. This was 5 percent less than the year-ago total.

"A potato industry rule of thumb is that the U. S. fall crop needs to be less than 300 million hundredweight for potato growers to make money," Guenther said.

The Idaho Potato Commission's increased budget for advertising and promotion is a hopeful sign that promises to improve the market demand for Idaho potatoes, the University of Idaho economist said.

"Another encouraging sign is the possibility of increasing potato exports to Europe, which had a very short crop. If more U. S. and Canadian potatoes move overseas, this could give strength to potato prices across the nation," Guenther said.

Turkeys and Broilers Less Profitable to Produce

Moscow, Idaho—Producers of turkeys and broilers will see their costs rise faster than their incomes in 1984, according to agriculture college faculty members at the University of Idaho, Washington State University and Oregon State University. In an economic outlook report, the educators said the poultry industry will feel a tightening cost-price squeeze in the months ahead.

"During the first half of 1984, prospects for turkey producers are poor. Feed prices will stay high and turkey prices will be held down by prices of competing meats," the economic forecasters said.

"Total meat prices during the first three months of 1984 are expected to be higher than in the first quarter of 1983. Faced with plentiful supplies of meat and higher feed prices, turkey producers will probably reduce the number of turkeys raised in the first half of 1984," they added.

For the first six months of 1984 broiler producers are expected to hold their output to the same levels as in the first half of 1983 the faculty members said. "With feed prices sharply higher than a year ago producers are not likely to plan large increases in broiler production they said.

Egg production is expected to decline several percentage points during the first half of 1984, the forecasters said. "We expect high feed costs to force producers to sell birds when their productivity declines, which will then lower total production," they said.

Egg prices during the first half of 1984 will probably rise 3 to 6 cents a dozen above the year-ago levels, the agricultural specialists said.
