4-H Leader Wants To Keep Teens Involved and Happy

Helen Beitia, a volunteer 4-H leader from Pocatello, has devised plans for a model workshop to train volunteers interested in developing and working with 4-H teen programs. Beitia will study existing successful programs in Idaho and will survey teens, cooperative extension staff, and interested counties to determine characteristics and skills needed for a successful teen organi-

Through personal visits, she will explain to interested counties the purpose and possibilities of such organizations.

Based on experience and know-ledge gained, a training model will be developed and then tested by providing an intensive all-day training workshop for interested volunteers.

With such a workshop, she plans to create an awareness of the value a county-wide teen organization has in keeping teens interested in 4-H. Long-term goals are increased teen enrillment and training of young people in communication skills.

For her proposal, developed with help from professional staff at the state 4-H office at the University of Idaho, Beitia was one of 52 volunteer 4-H leaders to be awarded an incentive grant of $1,000 in the second 4-H Salute to Excellence Program.

The grants, awarded in June, were made possible by support from R. J. Reynolds Industries. Inc., Winston-Salem, N. C.

In March, outstanding 4-H volunteer leaders from each state, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico were selected to attend the six-day intensive training session at the National 4-H Center in Chevy Chase, Maryland.

Sessions were designed to help volunteers develop creative ideas and skills to help leadership in their state devise initative proposals to meet 4-H needs.
