Annual Hunter Survey Gathers Harvest Data

The Department of Fish and Game's annual telephone survey of big game hunters is underway to gather information about harvests during 1984 seasons.

Staff biologist Lou Nelson said about 15,000 resident and nonresident general season hunters, including those who favor archery and muzzle loader seasons, will get phone calls, plus 5,000 participants in controlled hunts.

He emphasized that callers are not checking for possible violations. They are gathering data that will help us with future management decisions," Nelson said.

The survey continues through February 15 and results are expected to be available in early March.
