

Winter planning and Preparation Bring Better Summer Fruit Harvest

Even though the February snows are still piled high, it's not too early for those with backyard fruit trees to begin thinking about the upcoming growing season, says Walter Kochan, professor of plant science at the University of Idaho.

Growers should begin now to insure a successful fruit harvest, Kochan said. To attain maximum fruit production, growers should protect their trees from winter's fluctuating temperatures, and plan strategies to guard against summer diseases.

The rare burst of winter sunshine so greatly appreciated by humans may not be so beneficial to fruit trees. Changes in temperature caused by direct sunlight may damage the trees' developing tissue. The trunk of the tree is especially sensitive, and should be protected from sunlight on the southwest side, to guard against tissue damage caused by temperature changes, Kochan said.

Winter sunshine isn't the fruit tree's only enemy. The meadow vole looks like an ordinary mouse, but innocent appearance belies a capability to destroy a healthy fruit tree. In the winter, the vole may feed on the trunk of the tree, and will cause extensive damage to the tree if not controlled. "They'll eat on the trees right at the soil line," Kochan said. Poisons are available to fruit growers to control vole infestations.

Proper pruning is essential for maximum fruit production. "Not only must the trees be pruned, but they must be pruned properly," said Kochan. Different types of trees must be pruned differently, and at the proper time. Kochan warned that trees should not be pruned until the danger of severe winter weather is past.

Growers should plan their pest and disease control programs now, to guard against unnecessary fruit loss. Kochan said the most serious disease to watch for in peaches is peach leaf curl, while apple growers need to be especially careful of apple scab. "These are going to be problems; there's no doubt about it," he added.

Peach leaf curl is a fungus disease which strikes peaches, ornamental flowering peaches and nectarines. Peach leaf curl causes the tree's leaves to assume a leathery, curled look. The leaves fall prematurely, weakening the tree. The disease also decreases fruit production, and may kill an infected tree in 2 to 3 years if not controlled.

To control the disease, fungicide should be applied in the fall when two-thirds of the leaves have dropped, and sprayed again for extra protection before buds break in the spring.

Apple scab is a fungus disease of apple and crab apple trees which is more prevalent when the trees are exposed to a wet spring. The disease causes lesions to appear on the fruit and leaves, and spreads rapidly in rainy weather.

Control of apple scab requires a series of five fungicide applications beginning in the early spring, when green tips of leaves are first visible. Fungicide should be re-applied just

"Speaking Of . . ." Debuts On KUID-TV, FEB. 7

If you have been waiting for the opportunity to talk back to your television set—you will finally have your chance! KUID-TV will be premiering a weekly half-hour "live" television show, "Speaking Of . . ." on February 7th at 7:00 p. m. Hosted and produced by Ann D. Summerall, the show will feature subject matter relevant to the needs of North Idaho and Eastern Washington residents. The program format is discussion, live audience and telephone call-in.

Summerall is optimistic that the program will be successful, based on the pilot productions produced in the Fall of 1984. At that time, audience members and panelists were surveyed about program content, quality, topics and an overall perspective of the concept. Most enjoyed the shows yet felt that more time was needed to thoroughly discuss the topics.

Area merchants have been extremely generous with contributions of materials for the set construction and design, refreshments for the audience and general production needs.

The first program is entitled, "The Tarnishing of the Silver Valley". The panelists are: Dr. Al Moslemi, Director of the Forest Products Department at the University of Idaho and William Griffith, President and Chief Executive of the Helca Mining Corporation in Coeur d'Alene. The audience is comprised of representatives from the Clearwater Economic Development Association, Idaho Overseas, Job Services, the Office of the Governor, Elk River Community residents, the Private Industry Council and other interested community members. There will be a discussion of the economic outlook before the blossoms open, after three fourths of the blossom petals have fallen, again two weeks after the petals fall, and again in 10 to 14 days.

In addition, all old leaves should be raked from around the tree, to prevent the fungus from spreading.

Correct fertilization helps to insure maximum fruit production. Kochan said nitrogen should already have been applied in the fall, and more should be added in the spring. He also recommended applying one-fifth of a pound of ammonium sulphate for each year of age of the tree. Kochan said the ammonium sulphate should be applied as soon as possible.

Dick Bencoter to Moderate Conservation Tillage Conference Panel

Farmers, researchers, and industry representatives are featured on the Feb. 26-27 program of the fourth annual Inland Empire Conservation Tillage Conference. The conference will be held at Pullman, in Washington State University's Performing Arts Coliseum.

Reduced tillage and no-till practices will be discussed by a panel of farmers from the annual cropping area of the Palouse. Dick Bencoter, an American Ridge farmer, will be moderator. The panelists will be Steve Mader, Pullman, Wash, and three Idaho farmers—Gary Morris of Pottlatch, Lee Hawley of Moscow, and Jim Knowlton of Peck.

Conservation tillage in the summer fallow area will be the topic of another panel, moderated by Gale Gerling, Ritzville, Wash. Panel members will be four Washington farmers—Robert Garrett of Endicott, Bill McGregor of Hooper, Daniel Dahlke of Royal City, and Jack Ringwood of Sprague.

Agricultural researchers and agribusiness representatives will review new developments in conservation tillage. A large display of tillage machinery and equipment will be presented in the WSU coliseum during the two-day conference.

Tim Murray, WSU plant pathologist, will discuss wheat diseases and their control. Dick Auld, University of Idaho agronomist and plant breeder, will describe conservation tillage rotation alternatives.

A panel of experts will discuss the importance of good fertilizer management under no-till and minimum tillage systems. Another panel discussion will focus on the use of computers as a farm management tool. The Pacific Northwest No-till Association will present no-till yield awards. David Scherz, national conservation tillage specialist with the Soil Conservation Service, will speak on the place of conservation tillage in American agriculture.

How conservation efforts are succeeding in Australia and New Zealand will be the topic of Russ Fellows of Monsanto Corp. He represented his firm in Australia and New Zealand.

The Conservation Tillage Conference is sponsored by the Inland Empire Chapter of the Soil Conservation Society of America, in cooperation with the University of Idaho, Washington State University, and agricultural agencies and soil conservation districts.

The conference registration fee is $25 for individuals registering before the event or $30 at the door. The fee pays for printed materials, luncheons and a social hour.

Stony Point

Nellie Dean Steigers

Our wintery weather has stayed with us the past week! Two foot of snow ground cover at the Weippe ranch was reported on Sunday evening by Ken Steigers.

All goes well for Mildred Heath. "Beauty" trips are a pleasure, with friends Dorothy Partridge and Mary Hayhurst, to Kendrick! Last trip the ladies purchased sandwiches and pie, taking it home to Mildreds warm home, where hot coffee, etc., and the addition of helper Freda, it turned into a nice little home party! Mildred's son Gordon and one of his boys were Saturday callers. The weather outside continues cold, but her house is cozy warm and she is contented!

Stonypoint Friendship Club will not meet during February.

Among callers at the E. Steigers home this past week were Darrell Kerby, Anne Fisher, Mary Hayhurst, Dorothy and Earl Partridge, members of the Ken Steigers family, Ed and Ewa Jean Ranta, Bob and Nina Coffland of Joel, earlier.

"Ground Hog" Birthday Celebrations—

In the Missoula area, Keith Steigers was honored on his 52nd birthday, with a gathering at his home.

At Cherrylane, Feb. 2, 1985, was the other half of this pair, Kenneth Steigers!

An evening dinner party was held at his home! Those present for this event included Jim Belleu, "Rusty" Scherer and her 2 small daughters Shannon and Margaret, all of the Peck area, David Talbott and wife Karen Davis, Moscow, Hassan Farag Hassan of Cairo, Egypt, who is doing research work at Pullman College. Ken's parents Ernest and Nellie Steigers, and the home family, Linda, Bakalyn, Brant and Ken.

Karen recently returned from several months in Egypt, where she instructed in the use of USA farm cereal grains in bread making, to promote sales in foreign lands.

Small Margaret Soherer, who attends Kindergarten at Lapwai, was among those losing personal property in the recent burning of her school room—her eye glasses, kept at school to use there when reading.

We noted the pictures of two of our young men—Chad Heimgartner of Juliaetta-Kendrick and Kerby Kirkham, Lapwai among the 3-4 graders in the Tribune Hoop Shoot for 1985. Kerby, who placed 4th in his age group, made 18 of 25. Congratulations, Kerby!

Mr. and Mrs. Glen Stevens, and Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Steigers were

Ball Game Schedule Changes at GHS

There have been some changes in the schedule for the Genesee High School basketball team, and they are:
Monday, Feb. 11—
Elk River vs. Genesee Varsity at Genesee. 5:00 p. m., followed by a Clarkston team vs. Genesee JV's.
Tuesday, Feb. 12—

Troy vs. Genesee. Home game beginning at 6:15. At the half-time of the Varsity game, a young gymnastic class, instructed by Sandy Fritz, will perform.

Pie Stand Open—
Between and after these games, the Genesee Girls Club will have a pie sale in the multipurpose room. Bring your Valentine in for a piece of pie and a cup of coffee.
