Other area coaches told Aaron Cummings that his team wouldn't win a match this year, but he and his young, inexperienced squad of KHS grapplers are having the last laugh as they are already 2-2 on the season and looking better each match. "We're sure improving," Cum-

Cummings was very pleased with his team's victory over Potlatch and said the squad "got great performances" from Charlie Stamper, Jerry Fey, Solomon Kampf, and Ron Wiley, and it was the final contest of the match that saw Mike Carroll nail down the win for Kendrick. Going into the contest between Carroll and Dan Butterfield in the 189lb. class, Potlatch could have tied the match with a decision and won if Butterfield had pinned Carroll.

After two and a half rounds, Butterfield held a 5-4 advantage and then, Cummings reported, "Mike just dug down deep," and pinned his opponent in the final minute to give Kendrick the win. All but one weight class was decided either by a pin or forfeit.

Results of the match were: 103-double forfeit

The City of Kendrick has a new business phone number - 289-5157. The phone will ring into the Kendrick Fire Hall and also into Harris Accounting (for the city clerk Sharon Harris.)

The new phone line was approved by the city council as so many times the fire phone was called for business purposes.

It was a short session for the Kendrick city council as it held its regular meeting Tuesday evening, Jan. 12. All members of the council: Dana Magnuson, Jerry Brown, Dave Klatt and Dick Benjamin were present at the meeting presided over by Mayor Darrel Brocke. Also present were city clerk Sharon Harris and maintenance man Don Bateman.

Current bills against the city were read and approved for payment.

Under old business, the subject of possibly increasing the minimum water rate was again discussed and will be taken under advisement until further studies can be made. No action.

City Clerk Harris reported that several dog licenses have been purchased by residents for their pets. The city also intends to continue to enforce a stricter policy on pet owners allowing dogs to roam at large in the city limits.

The meeting was adjourned shortly after 9 o'clock.

Chemical Spill Forces Fishing Season Closure

A chemical spill near the head of the Little Salmon River last Dec. 19 resulted in a near-total fish kill and possible toxic contamination of fish on a twenty-mile stretch of river. During Air Inversions Fishing season for all species was closed to protect fish populations and Department Board of Health is ensafeguard human health, according to Fish and Game director Jerry Conley. The closure covers the Little Salmon from the Highway 95 bridge near Smokey Boulder road downstream to the confluence with the main Salmon.

This season points to the fact that Ron and Julie get started in their our God is the God of all creation, all peoples, all races, all communities. The word of Christ would travel far beyond the borders of Israel. We in the Kendrick-Juliaetta area are a good example of this. We do not find our roots in Israel, but in various European countries and perhaps from North American Indians, too. But the gift of Christian faith has been offered to us as to all people of the world because of God's love.

wisp of smoke is evident, and stream will be cleared in early 1988, and will be trying to remove the closure in time for at least part of the coal spring steelhead season. Very little impact is expected on the return of hatchery fish for the upcoming season, with the major consideration being the possibility that they would pick up chemical from either the Little or Main Salmon River. The Department of Health and Welfare is sampling water and fish tissue, with preliminary results to determine the extent of contamination expected within a few days. The Department of Fish and Game often criticizes plans to build roads near rivers, especially when those streams are important for migrating salmon and steelhead, because chemical or petroleum spills can be devastating to fish. The potential disaster of a spill along such streams as the South Fork of the Salmon, where the actual survival of a genetic strain is at issue, is illustrated by the extent of the fish kill on the Little Salmon. Department officials will point to past comments predicting such accidents in calling for protection of spawning streams and regulation of toxic transport.

PETS NEED ATTENTION. ON HOLIDAY, TOO

Holidays can be upsetting to household pets, but a few precautions and extra attention will help make this a happy time for pets also,

A holiday may be emotionally upsetting to a pet: their usual routine is changed drastically by holiday. activities.

Besides having their daily routines disrupted, pets often receive less attention than usual because everyone is too busy.

behavior, or go into hiding when farm products. The redistribution their domain is challenged by friends and relatives.

Pets can be eased through the holidays by giving them a little extra attention. Stop occasionally during the busy holiday season to reassure your pet-talk to them, pet them, sit with them for a moment-anything to let them know you're thinking of them.

Many unusual and uncommon foodstuffs are around during the holidays. A sudden change in diet can, upset any animal. A pet's regular diet should not be withheld on special occasions and caution should be used in giving scraps or treats. Feeding table scraps to pets is best avoided. Scraps lack the proper balance of nutrients to ensure good health and a pet eating scraps will

Turkey and chicken bones fed to pets can shatter into sharp shards that can lacerate an intestine or become lodged in the throat. Although these problems seldom occur, the potential for trouble is there when poultry bones are fed to pets, Christmas trees can be a special problem, especially with young dogs and cats. The ornaments are a temptation to play with and more than one well-dressed tree, has come crashing down on unsuspecting pets. It is best to tie the tree securely to a wall or else keep household pets out of the same room as the tree.

If a pet is going to be a Christmas gift, it should never be wrapped in a box-even one with adequate ventilation. Placing an animal-especially a young animal-inside a dark box can frighten and confuse them. It is far better to wrap a pet blanket, Saturday Harold Heimgartner and | feeding dish or something similar with a note that says the pet will come later, hopefully after all the

Delivering USDA Commodities

Fifth in a six-part series

It's a long road from the farm to the school cafeteria but each day fleets of trucks and long lines of railroad cars traverse it, delivering U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) purchased surplus foods to the thousands of warehouses that supply the nation's locally operated food assistance programs.

Last fiscal year more than 2.8 billion pounds of some 60 different commodities were provided schools, daycare centers, soup kitchens, meals on wheels programs, food banks, nonprofit institutions and other programs entitled to re-

Nervous pets may show unusual ceive federally acquired surplus helped farmers get a fair price for their agricultural products and provided children, families and the elderly with nutritious foods to supplement their diets.

Over the more than 50 years the federal government has been providing surplus farm products to domestic food programs, the commodity program has grown from a simple pickup at the farm and drop off at a warehouse operation. In California alone, the USDA delivers 112 million pounds of food yearly to more than 300 drop-off points. Getting that food to the right place at the right time and in the right form has has become increasingly complex, and involves three USDA agencies, more than 500 cemmercial food processors, and nearly 2,000 commercial carriers.

Overall, the USDA spent $2 billion to acquire surplus commodities for domestic food programs last fiscal year. It spent an additional $20 million to warehouse the food, $100 million to transport it and $60 million to process and package dairy commodities and honey.

Such things as the timing of the. delivery to local warehouses, the size of the package or container it comes in, the availability of basic commodities as well as processed foods, the quality and the nutritional value of the commodities are all important to those receiving them. Those numerous consideraitons, coupled with the large volume of the program, make it a very complex operation.

According to Dennis Stewart, US DA's western regional director for Food Distribution Programs, "We have to take into consideration even small details, such as what kind of unloading equipment will be used, which can influence how the shipment is packed and delivered." Stewart says if such details are overlooked, extra time and labor are needed to unload the food, and costs can shoot up.

USDA is committed to operating the delivery system more efficiently, according to John Bode, assistant secretary of agriculture. In testimony before congressional committees on the topic, Bode said, "Studies have shown wide variation in quality of service, charges for service and the amount of information provided to states. This is a serious problem and one which the National Association of State Agencies for Food Distribtuion has agreed to work on with the American School Food Service Association and USDA."

The frozen turkeys, canned pineapple, mozzarella cheese and other foods are purchased under price support and surplus removal legislation. USDA buys and arranges transportation for the commodities, which often go directly from the producer to a processor to be converted from raw food stuffs into more usable finished products

For example, wheat is converted into several different kinds of flour, surplus beef becomes hamburger patties, stew and roasts, and milk is processed into butter, nonfat dry milk, and five kinds of cheese. Of ten the commodities are further processed into complete entrees, such as pizzas or burritos to be used in the National School Lunch program. Commodities are sometimes stored before being distributed to states, but most are delivered directly to state and local warehouses from processors. State and local agencies take over responsibility for the commodifies once they are delivered to their warehouses or drop-off points.
