Weaving Can be for Anyone University of Idaho Students Learn

VICKI RENFROW, Kendrick, prepares a warp for a class project in her University of Idaho beginning weaving course. She is going to make an afghan. Renfrow has a spinning wheel and spins her own wool. She says her next big purchase is going to be a loom. She is a fashion merchandising major and is taking weaving to learn more about textiles.

The ancient craft of weaving can be enjoyed by nearly anyone.

Shirley Medsker's University of Idaho one-semester weaving class introduces students from many fields to the principles of constructing fabric using a modern loom.

The art of weaving uses many different styles and methods. The product varies from the fabric in a bed sheet to a creation of paper, from garment fabrics to designs made with wires and beads. The possibilities are limited only by the weaver's creativity.

Some like the discipline of weaving yardage, stoles, shawls, mats and other utilitarian fabrics.

Others prefer to let their imagination rule the outcome and manipulate the yarns to produce less structured weavings, such as tapestries, wall hangings and other art pieces.

Weaving can be enjoyed by young and old as well as by both men and women. In fact, the weavers of cloth in many cultures were men. A man's strength was needed to operate cumbersome handlooms and beat the yarns in tightly to make the nearly indestructible woollens of 18th and 19th century England and Scotland. The original weavers of Harris tweed were men.

Most of the elaborate coverlets and tablecloths of early America were woven by itinerant male weavers.

Now, improved weaving equipment allows either men or women to exercise their creative abilities. Many more women than men weave in today's America, although some of the best known modern weavers are still men.

Medsker has 15 students in her class, which is also offered to student from Washington State University. She expects next spring's weaving class to be even larger. The UI weaving lab, with the addition of equipment from WSU, has enough looms to accommodate about 24 students.

Of Medsker's beginning students this fall, two have looms of their own, three have fairly definite plans to obtain a loom soon and most of the rest hope to have one someday.

Vicki Renfrow is taking weaving to learn more about textiles. Vicki is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Renfrow and is a graduate of Kendrick High School. She owns a spinning wheel and enjoys spinning. Her major is fashion merchandising and retailing. She enjoys weaving and says her next purchase is a loom. She had not done any weaving before taking the class.

Medsker introduces her students to several methods of weaving that do not involve complicated equipment, such as tablet or card weaving, backstrap looms and others.

Some of man's first experiments with weaving threads to make cloth were done using crude versions of such methods.

Whether they are making place-mats for Christmas or dish-towels for their own use, the beginning weavers are learning the rudiments of a craft they can pursue anytime in their lives to satisfy their creative instincts.

Remodeling Will Allow Kirk Kampf to Spend Christmas at Home

Renovation has begun at the Kirk Kampf home as several neighbors and friends met with Paul Rush at the Kampf place Saturday morning to begin work.

Kirk, who sustained serious injury in a car accident near Enterprise, Oregon on Nov. 2, is a patient at Sacred Heart Hospital in Spokane. He is paralyzed from the chest down due to a severe spinal injury plus several other broken bones. His hospital stay is going to be a long one, but Kirk has one wish and that is to be able to be home with his family for one day for Christmas. This is also his family's only wish for the holidays.

Kirk's doctors will allow him to come home for the day if the renovation is complete. So if anyone would like to help on this project, please contact Paul Rush at 289-4611. Any help would be greatly appreciated.

Kirk would appreciate hearing from friends in the community.

Brocke and Hoisington Tie in Football Forecast

This was one football event that you couldn't use the "Kansas City Tie Breaker" on—as Darrel Brocke and Frank Hoisington finished in a dead-heat tie for first place in last week's Kendrick football forecast. Both Brocke and Hoisington each missed four predictions of the outcome of Sunday's NFL football contests, and both called the Monday night tie-breaker with identical final scores. They'll have to share the $5 which sponsors John and Charles Deobald at Kendrick Garage were awarding for the first place winner.

Miss Trish Jeffries, daughter of Tom and Carol Jeffries of Bear Ridge finished a close second place. This week's forecast is being sponsored by Red Cross Pharmacy.

Out on the Limb—

Will miracles never cease! Jeff Smith picked the Kansas City Chiefs to beat the New York Jet last week and darned if they didn't do it! This boosted (if that's the proper word), Smith's season record to 6-8, which really isn't too bad for a man who doesn't understand the game. Not only did Jeff guess right, he also is gloating over the Seahawks' less than impressive loss on Sunday, and he couldn't keep from mentioning the Hawks managing just two first downs.

Full of pride and confidence, Jeff is going to go back to his beloved Miami Dolphins and predicts they will defeat Cleveland at Miami.

Cribbage Tournament Sunday—

For the cribbage players the community, the Town and Country Diner is sponsoring a tournament at the Diner Sunday, Dec. 11 from 3 to 6 p.m. If you're interested, contact Jeff Smith. Jeff said this will be a double elimination tournament and there will be a $5 entry fee. He said there will be a 100% pay-back.

Meal Site Tidbits—

November birthdays were celebrated at the Meal Site on Wednesday with delicious food, warm friendship and many happy returns to the seniors celebrating their special day. We are indeed very fortunate to have seniors who have reached the golden years of eighty and ninety years or more who are still able to participate in the senior's program and attend the meal site. You certainly were a good looking group of "young" gals!

Our good friends, the Old Time Fiddlers, played many old time tunes during the celebration, making our birthday party something extra to remember.

Several guests from Moscow, Pullman, Albion, and Troy joined with us for this happy occasion.

Friday was the beginning of a new month and the last one of 1988, another year has almost passed us by, but all are eagerly looking forward to the many activities and projects being planned for 1989.

Good Will Toward Men

As we celebrate the virgin birth of Jesus Christ the theme "good will toward men" (Luke 2:14) might be well kept in mind. We, as Christians, are encouraged to show good will toward all men, and in particular, those who hold a different system of beliefs. Jesus said that He came not to judge the world (John 12:47), and we in His steps are not to judge the hearts of other individuals. Loving, not hating, is the course of action that Jesus showed and taught. Bigotry and irrational fear are not motivators for the Christian.

However, this does not mean that doctrines detrimental to the Christian faith are to be embraced. A clear distinction must be made between Christianity and groups who claim to be a part of Christianity, such as Mormonism and Jehovah's Witnesses. The most important distinction is how Jesus Christ is viewed.

Jehovah's Witnesses say that Jesus is "... a mighty god, but not the Almighty God..." (The Truth Shall Make You Free, page 47). The Bible flatly refutes this and equates Jesus and the Almighty God as one and the same. (Compare Rev. 1:17 with 4:6.)

Mormonism through its prophet Brigham Young, teaches against the virgin birth. "When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus... He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost... was begotten by his Father... after the same manner as... Cain, Abel, and the rest of the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve..." (Journal of Discourses Vol. 1, pp 259, 260.)

Many sincere and dedicated people believe and follow these two systems of beliefs. Christians are admonished to have "good will" toward them, but not to follow their beliefs. The Jesus of the Bible is shown strong when Christians express His love for all people.

Jesus was married to both Mary and Martha. So he could see his seed before he died. (Journal of Discourses Vol. 4 pp 259, 260.)

The Egyptians, about 3,000 B. C. used a checkmark as the letter T.

Fires and Special Elk Equal Unique Yellowstone Research

The handling and the results of the great Yellowstone fires of '88 will be debated for a long time, but there are some who are pretty excited about a rare opportunity the fires left behind.

After the sparks died, University of Idaho Wildlife professor James M. Peek, doctoral graduate student David Vales, and the National Park Service biologists they work with found themselves uniquely positioned to chart the response of Yellowstone elk to the changes the fires brought to so much of their habitat.

Peek and Vales didn't set out to collect post-burn information on Yellowstone elk. It just happened that way. Peek explained that for the past two years, Vales, with Park Service biologists, had been collecting information on elk habitat selection patterns. "Then," said Peek, "the fires came through, and we realized we had elk living in both burned and unburned areas."

"Now we have 2 years of elk pre-burn movement and habitat selection information. Are we in a good position to research postburn movement? You bet."

Peek explained that to make any conclusions about post-burn activities requires a substantial body of pre-burn information. Besides the information he and Vales have already collected, they have access to research and observations on Yellowstone elk going back all the way to the 19th century, and what has been learned over the years about Yellowstone elk has been applied to elk management elsewhere, said Peek.

"It's fair to say that the Yellowstone elk populations have been a bellwether in elk management. We have learned a lot from those herds; a lot has been adapted from our understanding of them," he added.

Why are Peek, Vales, and other biologists more excited about the Yellowstone fires than other burns—some deliberately set for management purposes—in elk ranges elsewhere?

"They're infinitely more significant," said Peek. "First, nothing close to the magnitude of those fires has ever happened in the park since it has been a park. About 40 percent of elk winter range has been burned over. Second, they did happen in Yellowstone, and that makes the elk special."

Said Peek, "Yellowstone elk aren't like other elk. For the most part, they aren't managed."

He explained that the National Park Service has a "hands-off" management philosophy for Yellowstone

Maybe It Wasn't the Flu

Some people shy away from flu shots because they've had them in the past and still have gotten sick. Most likely, what they had wasn't influenza. It's common for sufferers of bad colds and diarrhea to blame influenza for ailments caused by rhinovirus or stomach virus.

"Most of the illnesses people get during the winter season are not influenza," says Dr. Eric Larson, professor of medicine at the University of Washington School of Medicine. "Influenza occurs in epidemics and tends to surge every two or three years."

Although flu is only an unpleasant inconvenience for most Americans, it kills 25,000 each year in this country, and claims 40,000 lives in epidemic years.

Influenza differs from other respiratory illnesses because it strikes suddenly and is usually accompanied by a fever, intense fatigue and persistent cough. It usually does not disrupt the digestive tract.

Like hurricanes and other devastating acts of nature, severe epidemics are named—Hong Kong flu, Swine flu and Russian flu are among the memorable influenza epidemics of the past few decades.

"The strategy is that we can't necessarily prevent epidemics because we can't inoculate every single person," Larson explains, "but we can reduce the chance of deaths from flu by vaccinating people most at risk for complications from the illness."

Flu is a particular danger to people with cancer, diabetes, or chronic diseases of the heart, lung or kidney, and people older than 65. Flu shots also are strongly recommended for health care workers, to prevent their spreading the disease to sick people in their care and also to make sure they're on the job and not sick at home in the event of a severe epidemic.

People who are allergic to eggs or who have had a bad reaction to a flu shot in the past should not be immunized.

People can't get flu from flu shots because the vaccination uses a dead virus. Less than 5 percent of people who are inoculated have a reaction to the shot, most commonly a sore arm, mild fever or muscle aches.

It's recommended that vaccinations be given by the end of November so your body has a chance to build up antibodies before the flu season is in full force this winter.

A flu shot can reduce your chance of getting the illness by 80 percent. Even if someone who is immunized comes down with flu, the illness is likely to be milder and shorter than it would otherwise be.

Flu shots are not necessary for younger, healthier people. "They may get sick, but they'll get over it as well," Larson says. He advises against it for two reasons: There's likely to be a shortage of vaccine this year, so it should be reserved for those who really need it; and

Whatever is found will certainly be applied to out-of-park management practices, he said.

Peek has his own short-term predictions for the Yellowstone elk. "There is definite potential for population expansion because of the fires." He added that if there is a "crunch"—a population decline—it will last just through this winter. Then, he said, the elk will find themselves in "a sea of green, up to their eyeballs in high-quality food."

The project will continue for at least another two years, Peek said. However, "if the data seem really significant, we might wind up pursuing it indefinitely," he said.

The project is conducted in cooperation with the National Park Service and funded in part by the National Rifle Association, the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, and by McIntire-Stennis federal funds.

there's always the potential for an adverse reaction with any immunization, so healthy people who will easily survive a bout of flu should not needlessly expose themselves to the risk.

Flu vaccine changes from year to year to correspond with the most troublesome strains of flu each season. The formula is determined by the federal Centers for Disease Control in consultation with the World Health Organization.

President Grover Cleveland had more than one "first" to his credit. He was the first president to marry while in the White House. He wed Frances Folson in 1886. He is also the only president to have served two non-consecutive terms. Both records have yet to be broken.

Junior Miss Royalty Was Part of Clarkston Parade

The K-J Junior Miss royalty participated in the annual Christmas parade held at Clarkston on Saturday, Dec. 3.

Following the theme of "A Home Town Christmas", the float was decorated with a fireplace hung with the traditional stockings, filled with a gift for each girl and a tree which had been decorated in an old-fashioned style by Queen Julie Bateman and princesses Kelli Corkill, Chantel Hoisington and Leah Heimgartner.

This was the final parade event of the season that the girls will attend. They have participated or appeared in several area parades this year and won third place in the Lewiston Round-Up parade in September.
