breakfast Saturday morning.

Ruth attended the reception for Louis Wright at the Manor on Sunday. Judy and Keith Thornton of Peck were Monday supper guests of Ruth and on Tuesday Ruth attended the Gladys King funeral in Lewiston. She also visited granddaughter Cindy Duncan and children of Seattle at the Harvey Dale home.

Drew Witt spent Saturday with grandparents Don and Marilyn Eichner.

Sunday Nell and Alberta Turner attended the reception for Louis Wright at the Johnson Manor and later enjoyed a drive in the beautiful spring sun. David and Norma Crocker of Spalding were evening callers of Nell's and did a few chores for her.

Jim and Hazel Candler, Ron and Jimmie Kaye Mael and Brad and Theresa Mael took a drive in the Park area sighting more elk than they could count.

The Shmitt grandchildren of Lewiston spent Monday and Tuesday with Jim and Hazel Candler.

Idaho's Population
Between 1980 and 1988
Grew 6.2% says Census

Seven years after Idaho Territory was organized in 1863, its population was 14,999. Idaho was admitted to the Union in 1890 and in that census year its population was 88,548; in just a decade, by 1900, the population nearly doubled, reaching 161,772.

Idaho's growth has been modest but steady, increasing in every decade since it attained statehood. The Gem State's most rapid growth rate in the 20th century—101.3 percent—came during the 1900-1910 decade. At mid-century the population stood at 588,637. The state's greatest increase in actual numbers, 230,920, came during the 1970's.

After the 1980 census Idaho, with 687,191 inhabitants ranked 43rd in population among the 50 states and the District of Columbia; in 1988 it ranked 42nd and had just over one million inhabitants.

Exploration of the Idaho area began with the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1805-'06. Next came fur traders, setting up posts after 1809, and missionaries to the Indians from the 1830s through the 1850s. Mormons made their first permanent settlement in Idaho in 1860.

Idaho's Gold Rush began that same year and brought thousands of permanent settlers. In the ensuing Indian Wars there occurred the 1,300 mile trek in 1877 of Chief Joseph and the Nez Perce tribe, pursued by troops that caught them a few miles short of the Canadian border. In 1890, Idaho became a state.

The state has only one metropolitan area, Boise City. Between the 1980 census and 1988, the Boise City area grew by 15.9 percent, or 27,600, to a total of about 200,700 residents.

Among the Gem State's 44 counties, the 1988 population ranged from about 600 in Camas to about 200,700 in Ada. All but 17 of the state's counties showed population gains between 1980 and 1988. Blaine County recorded a 43.3 percent growth rate during the period; at the other end of the growth spectrum, Shoshone County lost nearly a quarter of its residents after mines there closed.

Boise City, with a population of 2,311, was already the state's largest city in 1890. By 1980, Boise City's population reached 101,451—nearly 45 times larger than 90 years earlier. Pocatello, the state's second largest city in 1980 with a population totaling 46,340, had 4,046 residents in 1900 when first reported in the census.

The Gem State's population became more than 50 percent urban between the 1960 and 1970 censuses; the nation as a whole turned that corner in 1920. Idaho's urban proportion was 47.5 percent in 1920 and grew to 54 percent in 1980, trailing, by far, the national proportion of 73.7 percent.

Idaho's chief agricultural products are potatoes, peas, alfalfa seed, sugar beets, wheat, hops, barley, plums and prunes, corn, apples and hay. Idaho is often called the "potato capital of the world." Its principal manufactured goods are processed food,

The state has beautiful tourist attractions—Hells Canyon, the deepest gorge in North America; Craters of the Moon; Sun Valley, a year-round resort in the Sawtooth Mountains; Lake Coeur d'Alene, and the River of No Return Wilderness Area.

Other population trends in Idaho since the 1980 census:

—The average population per household continues to decline. In Idaho, there were 2.71 persons per household in 1988, down from the 2.85 recorded in the 1980 census. Households in Idaho, however, were larger than the national average of 2.62 and 2.75 respectively.

—The number of households (occupied housing units) in Idaho grew by 11.9 percent between 1980 and 1988, while the population increased by 6.2 percent. Nationally, during the same period, the number of households increased 13.9 percent compared with an 8.5 percent increase in the total population.

—The number of persons 65 years old and over in Idaho grew by 25.6 percent between 1980 and 1988, from about 94,000 to about 118,000. This was considerably higher than the national increase of 18.9 percent for that age group during 1980-'88. But the number of persons in this age group in 1988 made up 11.7 percent of Idaho's population compared with 12.4 percent for the nation as a whole.

—Idaho's 6.2 percent gain in population between 1980 and 1988 came in spite of a net outmigration of 31,000, or 3.3 percent, during the same persons moving to other states or outside the United States.

The giant cactus of Arizona—the sahuaro—is a tree without leaves, without a single branch. It has pleats on its sides that expand or contract as much as a foot when there is rain.

On any given day in America, roughly 20 million people buy take out food.

The Wright brothers, who invented the airplane, played with a toy helicopter as boys.

America's first national Monument was Devils Tower, so designated by Theodore Roosevelt. It's in Wyoming near America's first national park, Yellowstone.
