Paul, a forester with Potlatch Corporation in Headquarters, walked ents, staff and community. He mentthe school children through the hands-on steps of planting trees. Together, they sorted and soaked seeds, off the hot lunch program, causing filled planters with peat moss, handplanted the seeds, and learned how fast trees can grow with the right knowledge and care.

Carolyn, a teacher at Lewis-Clark Setate College in Lewiston, read two books, "The First Forest", and "The Giving Tree," pointing out how fiction is different from non-fiction, that sometimes writers become so creative that they sacrifice true science to tell their stories. For example, trees don't really lose their fruit and 2 proteins (bread/meat/ leaves in the fall because they were cereral-choice or combination withpunished and that trees don't have in). Taylor mentioned that is is an emotions like happiness and sadness. "But it's usually interesting to read what some students walk into school how people can imagine things and eating for breakfast—a can of pop it does make interesting reading Carolyn explained. Then she shared a video with the children about one man who didn't sacrifice science to have a happy ending.
