Harold and Vern Brammer of Meridian were guests of Cecil and Jo Brammer from Friday evening until Saturday. Energy Division Provides Tips for Wood Stove Users

Cold weather is fast approaching, and Idaho wood stove users are getting ready to fire up their stoves. Whether you buy previously-cut wood or cut it yourself, state energy officials have some practical advice to help you build your supply of firewood.

Give special consideration to the type of wood you plan to burn. The amount of heat produced by each species can differ because of the variation in moisture content and density. The harder the wood, the higher the heat value. For example, locust, apple and box elder have high heat value while willow, aspen and cottonwood have low heat value. Most firs and pines have medium to low heat value.

If you purchase wood cut by someone else, find out if it's green or seasoned. Wood is "seasoned" when it's been split and dried by air for at least six months for softwoods or about one year for hardwoods. Most wood that's been cut within the past few months is still considered to be "green", and probably contains too much moisture to provide sufficient heat. Green wood can also produce smoke or creosote.

Wood is generally sold by the cord. A standard or full cord is a volume of 128 cubic feet. When stacked, a cord should measure 8 feet long, 4 feet high and 4 feet wide. A full cord can weigh about 1 1/2 tons when dry or more than 2 tons when wet.

Stove Maintenance
 Wood burning stoves and chimneys should be cleaned before the new heating season begins. Creosote is an unavoidable by-product of burning wood, so regular cleaning is necessary. How often your stove and chimney need to be cleaned depends on how much the stove is used.

Everyone is a genius at least once a year—a real genius has his original ideas closer together.

Last week's rain made the area much less crunchy dry. Fire danger is still not completely past but the atmosphere feels less like a powder keg!

Word has been received that a former Deary resident, Mae (Enger) Currier fell, breaking her hip, Thursday at Moscow. At the age of 90 she had been in exceptionally good health and has been very active in church and community affairs in Lewiston where she and her husband lived after his retirement. Mae has been a widow many years and still has many friends in the area. She was hospitalized at St. Joseph's and cards sent to her there will be forwarded as necessary. It has been requested that no flowers be sent.

Jeff Schroeder returned Monday from a successful summer fishing season in Alaska.

Clinton and Ethel and Jerry and Jody Smith enjoyed the Deary High School Class of 1956 reunion Sunday. Twelve class members including Ethel and Jody and nine spouses enjoyed a catered dinner at the White Horse Cafe and a tour of the twice-remodeled school complex as well as several hours of "remember-whening" and posing for pictures.

Wanda and Karl Enger are preparing for their Saturday auction. Wanda will sell the remaining stock from her antique shop and many, many other items are being added.

The auction, by Garrott Auctions will be held at the Enger place—follow the signs. Viewing will start at 9 a. m., with the auction to start at 10 a. m. Lunch will be sold on the grounds. Lists of items to be sold will appear in this week's Money-Saver and as well in the Gazette.

If I'm allowed to brag—check out the front page of section D of the Sunday, Sept. 22 Lewiston Tribune. Our multitalented daughter, Barbara Kinzer, won $100 in the Tribune-Wassen's Drug photo contest. If you look closely at her picture, you'll see the shiny faces of two of our granddaughters and some of their friends among the sunflowers.

Take Note of Your Nails—
Deformities May be
Sign of Health Problems

Nails are handy things of have around. They provide protection and support to the ends of fingers and toes, amplify sense of touch, make it easier to handle small objects and also work great for scratching.

Yet fingernail and toenail damage or deformities can cause some people pain and embarrassment and may also be a sign of systemic diseases. Beware of changes in your nails and seeking advice from a physician can help determine the best course of action.

"If someone notices their fingernails or toenails look different, they should ask their primary care physician or dermatologist," Dr. Phillip Fleckman, associate professor of medicine in the division of dermatology at the University of Washington.

Fingernail problems are more prevalent as people age. Trouble signs to take note of include nails that discolored, thickened or become detached from the skin.

Roughly half of nail deformities are due to fungal infections. Such infections are most common in toenails and usually spread from athlete's foot.

The introduction of new drugs for fungal infections offers patients faster relief from nail troubles. Yet Fleckman points out that an infection needs to be correctly diagnosed before patients consider a line of treatment.

"You can't tell if a nail is infected just by looking at it," Fleckman says. "A sample taken from the nail or from underneath the nail should be examined to confirm the presence of an infection."

The look of fingernails and toenails can also be an indicator for some systemic diseases, including heart disease, lung disease and kidney disease. For example "clubbing" of nails, in which the tips of the fingers swell and the nail becomes elevated from the nail bed (the skin that connects the nail to the fingers), can be a sign of lung disease. Changes in color or shape of nails, excessive ridging or separation of nails from the nail bed can all reflect possible health problems. Nail problems can also be caused by ill-fitting shoes or injuries.

Nails that are brittle and crack or split easily can result from excessive wetting and drying of the nails. Fleckman recommends lubricating hands, and especially the nails themselves, frequently. Nail polish can also be good for brittle nails since it protects them from water exposure. However, nail polish remover can be very harsh on the nails since it dries them out, so it's advisable not to remove and re-apply nail polish frequently.

Cutting and cleaning nails properly can help avoid some nail problems. Fleckman advises people to be gentle when cleaning underneath the nails in order to avoid breaking the protective seal underneath the nail plate called the hyponychium. While fingernails should be clipped with round edges, toenails should be cut straight across to avoid in-grown toenails.

"Nails that are troublesome or interfere with your daily life, whether from pain or embarrassment, should be examined by a physician," Fleckman says.

The primary method used by the IRS in selecting returns for audits is a computer program that measures the probability of an error in each tax return.
